THE DEMOCRAT.

EGG HARBOR CITY, JANUARY 5, 1867.

PUBLISH THIS FIRST.

There are customs of society, which by long use, become almost as necessary to the welfare of society, as the laws of nature; and those who violate them are as much to be pitied as those who violate the laws of nature, and are equally as unpardonable in the one as they are in the other. But the laws among these which have long become common, and which control a portion of society, are those which are black, cruel, and unjustifiable. Such are those dictates of humanity, the neglect of which involve, not the individual, but the community, demands that they should be visited with the social or political penalty. The individual injured of an ill-timed or ill-conceived article, is not the individual intended to be hit; and the
