OUT SEVENTEEN HOURS JURY DISAGREES ON SUIT AGAINST DOCTOR

MARVEL CHARGED WITH LEAVING RUBBER DRAIN IN WOUND

SECOND TRIAL IS PROBABLE

Defendant Denies Negligence and Noted Surgeons Testify He Did All Possible — Little Mildred Birch Used To Describe Mode of Operation — Legal Battle From Start To Finish.

After deliberating from four o'clock Thursday afternoon until nine-thirty yesterday morning, the jury in the suit of Prof. Woodbridge Riley, of Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., against Dr. Emory Marvel, the well-known Atlantic City surgeon, for $15,000 damages for alleged injuries to his daughter Katherine, through carelessness in leaving a rubber drain in the child's neck after an operation, reported a disagreement to Judge C. L. Cole and was discharged.

Judge Cole excused the jurors until Monday next and it is thought probable that the suit will be tried again either next week or later during the month.

Dr. Marvel denied any carelessness in his operation on the child and in his contention that he used every possible precaution he was borne out by other surgeons. The subsequent ill health of the child, he believed, and the fact that the wound did not heal properly, were not due to the presence of the drain but to a tubercular condition. Following the operation it appeared, Dr. Marvel missed the drain, which was a narrow strip of rubber, and although he probed for it in the wound it could not be located at the time. Subsequently it was removed by another surgeon. The little girl had been operated upon four weeks before being taken to Dr. Marvel by a surgeon at Poughkeepsie for tubercular glands. The wound had healed except at the upper end. By another operation Dr. Marvel endeavored to perfect the healing process.

The discovery that the rubber drain was missing was described by Dr. Marvel. "When I examined the bandage," he said, "I found it cut in two places. The rubber drain was gone. I asked Mrs. Riley about it. I also asked the nurse where the drain had gone. They both said they didn't know. The child's wound was in a threatening condition, I endeavored to find the missing drain, and we made a thorough search for it. The sheets of the child's bed had been washed and the water thrown away, and I thought, perhaps the drain had been lost that way. I told Mrs. Riley the drain was either in the wound or outside somewhere. I asked her if the child could have disturbed the bandage herself, and Mrs. Riley said she might have pulled it off her neck. I told her if the drain had slipped in the wound it would be injurious to anesthetize the child then and reopen the wound at the time, and it was safest to let it remain in the wound, if it was there. . . . Consequently, if the drain did not work out, it could be probed for and extracted later."

A dramatic feature of the proceedings was the exhibition of the little girl patient to the jury by her mother, who carried her in her arms to each individual juror and to the Court for inspection of the wound in her neck.

As an object to this demonstration Dr. Emory Marvel participated in sight of the jury the operation of dressing the wound and of how he probed for the missing drain, with little 4-year-old Mildred Birch, of this place, as his subject.

Surgical experts gave their testimony one for the plaintiff and the others for the defendant. The latter declared they had willingly come forward to testify in Dr. Marvel's behalf because they believed he was being unjustly accused. They testified he did all that was scientific and proper under the circumstances, after an agreed history of the case had been recited to them.

The plaintiff's expert, Dr. Wallace Fritz, of Philadelphia, on the other hand, criticised Dr. Marvel's treatment of the patient, declaring his taking the bandages off the wound too soon caused the wound to open, and that the rubber drain in the wound affected the heart and nervous system of the child.

Of the experts examined Dr. Alexander Ross of the Cooper Hospital, Camden, testified after a hypothetical question reciting the history of the case was read to him, that Dr. Marvel had exercised due skill, care and diligence in his treatment of the child's wound. His rubber drain was far better than any other in use, said the doctor. Similar evidence was given by Dr. John Gibbons of the Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia.

Dr. Fritz, however, testified in different vein. Special care, he said, was demanded in making drains secure in wounds, and this had not been exercised by Dr. Marvel, who he said, had taken off the bandage too soon, thus causing the wound to reopen.

The total cost of the operation was $220, no part of which had been paid. In detail the cost was $4 a day for treatment; room, $25; $10 for the operation and the rest was the nurse's fee.

The suit was a marked legal battle from start to finish, Judge Frank Smathers and William I. Garrison representing Mr. Riley, former Attorney General Edmund Wilson and George R. Gredy defending the surgeon. The appeals of counsel to the jury at the conclusion of the case were exceptionally brilliant and interesting and taken altogether the suit was one of the most remarkable ever heard here. At the conclusion a novel sight was presented by the cordial handshaking of the complainant and the defendant as they left the court room discussing the case and the arguments of counsel.

EX-SHERIFF'S TRIAL DURING COMING WEEK

Supreme Court Refused To Nolle Pros. Owing To Early Date Being Fixed—Case Held Up Three Years.

The decision Wednesday of the Supreme Court refusing to nolle pros the indictment against former Sheriff Enoch L. Johnson on a charge of removing registry books from the Clerk's Office was based upon the contention of the court that the date for the trial of ex-Sheriff Johnson had already been fixed.

It was stated to the court that the understanding was that Mr. Johnson was to be tried next Tuesday, the date already fixed. Supreme Court Justice Kalisch said he so understood, and counsel on both sides concurred in this understanding.

Justice Kalisch stated that a homicide case was set down for June 8 and might take two days, but the trial of ex-Sheriff Johnson would follow immediately.

Former Attorney General McCarter, counsel for the Mr. Johnson, moved for the nolle prosequi on the ground that the Constitution guarantees the right of every citizen to a speedy trial and in this instance the case has been repeatedly postponed for nearly three years.

Supreme Court Upholds Man Who Had To Stand Up.

The Supreme Court in session at Trenton Tuesday last handed down a decision setting aside the conviction of Calvin Burns for riding in a car of the Atlantic City and Shore Railroad Company without paying his fare.

Burns was convicted under the act of 1911, prohibiting trespassing upon railroad trains or railroad property. The defendant boarded a crowded trolley car at Pleasantville, refused to pay his fare unless he was given a seat. No seat could be provided. He refused to leave the car and was arrested in Atlantic City. His conviction followed. Justice Swayze in his opinion says in part:

"In proceedings under the act of 1911 it is necessary to prove a trespass contrary to the rules of the railroad corporation, and an intention to ride without paying fare."

URGES EARLY PURCHASE OF PUBLIC SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Commissioner Kendall After Dilatory Education Boards.

State Commissioner of Schools Calvin H. Kendall has thrown a jolt into dilatory school boards throughout the State by a letter, portions of which we are requested to publish by County Supt. Henry M. Cressman. Mr. Kendall writes as follows:

"Purchase early the school supplies that will be needed in the schools under your jurisdiction for the school year beginning next September. Better service, better prices and better selection will be had if purchasing is done early.

"School supplies are absolutely necessary if teachers are not to be hindered in their work with children. Some boards of education save money by purchasing supplies in quantity, and in this way often secure wholesale rates or prices.

"Not only is it advisable to purchase these supplies early, but it is necessary to see that they are in the schools before the opening in September. The ordering of supplies in the Spring or before the first of July should insure their delivery at the schools before September first. I regret to say that in some schools the supplies are not delivered until long after the schools are opened. Teachers in such schools, being without the tools for work, are disheartened, and the children suffer.

"I also urge that necessary repairs to school buildings be taken up promptly at the beginning of the Summer vacation.

"In some schools of the State the water closets or outbuildings still need attention. Much was accomplished last Summer, but in some sections much remains to be done.

"In a few schools of the State children are still seated in such a way that they face the light. Under no circumstances should this be allowed a single day. If the seats cannot be rearranged, the windows in front of the children should be closed or screened."

Timely Tips.

And the announcements came as prophesied. Another elopement for June is being quietly arranged, but we have been unable to learn the date.

Even at dusk, on a quiet lake, silhouettes against the sky testify to many things.

Young men who overturn furniture and drop straw hats in a quiet house at the terrible hour of two a. m. should have more regard for the family's rest.

"Roamin' in the gloamin'" down lovers' lane, if you ken where that is, you may see each twilight, and you look aright, a happy twain; but you maun hae the giffies' kennin' wha're an' how tae peep.

Sleepy neebors were aroused nigh unto midnight Sunday last by a wicked racket, but 'twas only an over-burdened hammock giving way to its feelings and depositing its burden gently (?) on the floor.

We have had numerous requests for more detailed information about occurrences referred to in our "Timely Tips," but for the edification of those who would wrest these little secrets from our editorial breast, we will state that they are not to be bought, begged or stolen. And from this decision there is no appeal.

GIRL BADLY BURNED WHEN BABY FIRES BED

Father Smothered Flames With Blanket In Time To Save Tot's Life—Suffering Much Pain But Will Recover.

Toddling out of bed shortly after six o'clock yesterday morning, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Onda found a match on the floor and accidentally struck it against the bed in which Anna, his eight-year-old sister, was sleeping. The flames quickly enveloped the bed-clothes and the agonized cries of the little girl brought her father rushing upstairs from the kitchen just as he was about to leave for the cotton mill, where he is employed as assistant overseer of the spinning room.

With a blanket Onda leaped through the smoke and flames to the bed and bravely smothering the fire, rescued the tot in time to save her life, but she was badly burned from the waist down. Dr. H. C. James was hurriedly summoned and did everything possible to relieve her suffering and though she was in great agony yesterday from the burns she is expected to recover.

Curiously enough the little boy was not burned at all as the fire frightened him away from the burning bed. Had Onda been a few moments later reaching the child she would undoubtedly have burned to death.
