A NEW ALCESTIS.

[illegible]

I read the story that she loved so well.

[illegible]

I read how sweet Alcestis died to save Her lord's dear life, [illegible]

And reading thus I slept, and sleeping dreamt It was no longer King Admetus' bride [illegible]

[illegible] Forgetting all our sorrows in an hour.

And then the vision passed [illegible] And feel the desolation of the day, And prayed the dream to come again and stay Lest ere the race was run, my heart should break.

Madame De Maintenon.

BY HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH

"Do you not see that I am dying with melancholy in a height of fortune which once my imagination could scarce have conceived? I have been young and beautiful; have had a high relish of pleasure, and have been the universal object of love. In a more advanced age I have spent years in intellectual pleasures; I have at last risen to favor; but I protest to you, my dear Madame, that every one of these conditions leaves in the mind a dismal vacuity."

So wrote Madame de Maintenon, the gifted and beautiful wife of Louis XIV. Born in a prison, and inured to poverty in early life, [illegible] the most dazzling court of Europe. And among the brilliant dames that figured in the splendid saloons of Versailles during the long reign of Louis the Great, few are to be compared with her in amiable disposition and personal grace and loveliness. She possessed both the affection and the confidence of the King, and although unassuming in affairs of state, she so influenced the King as to virtually wield the sceptre of France. Everything that wealth could procure was at her command. [illegible]

[illegible]

SPEAKING TO HIM.

[illegible] other, as streets should be. But the prettiest [illegible] belonged to Miss Margery Bingham, an old maid past all denial, since she [illegible] to forty. She was a pretty woman with a red and white complexion, and glossy black hair, all kinks, and waves, and ripples. Given to the wearing of white [illegible] charmingly of an afternoon, and white bonnets of transparent [illegible] when she was at church.

Long ago she had quarrelled with her boy sweetheart, Charlie Christopher, and the young fellow had left home and gone to sea, [illegible] drowned, probably, for he had never been heard of since, and it was for this reason, so said the gossips of Harrowdale, that Miss Margery Bingham was single still. However, if she had been what old Aunty Hetter called disappointed, she bore it well, and had no die away air about her, and no habit of looking at the moon. Neither did she keep a diary, and all the [illegible] of her past home affairs to be found among her possessions was one little golden ring, and a locket of fair hair, folded together in a little silver box, two inches by three, which lay in a very safe place up stairs.

Certainly Margery had the comfort of knowing that her spinsterhood was her own choice. She had offers in plenty; and even now there was Dr. Squills around the corner, a first-rate practice, who would have given, not his eyes, perhaps, but certainly half of all the possessions his eyes looked upon to make Margery Mrs. Squills.—And although the good doctor had had four wives before, no other single lady of Miss Bingham's age in Harrowdale would have objected to him on that score.

But she turned back on the doctor and his offer, and declared that she had been her own mistress too long to take kindly to obeying any one now, and went her way rejoicing. What a home she had, and how it shone with rubbing, and scrubbing, and polishing, from the chimney-pot to the scraper. The two servants, a stout black woman, and a girl from the poor-house, had their hands full, and many a matron envied Miss Margery her wonderfully ordered home and well drilled domestics. [illegible]

[illegible]

"I don't do it, madam!" said the Captain. "I haven't looked at your house. [illegible]"

"At your," said the Captain. "Oh [illegible]"

"Margery!" shouted Miss Bingham.

"Oh, good gracious!" [illegible]

And the Captain came closer [illegible]

"My name is Charley Christopher," he said.—"Oh, Margery, [illegible]"

And poor Miss Margery began to cry.

"You're handsomer than ever," said the Captain.

Margery blushed.

"And so I mustn't even look at it any more," said the Captain. [illegible]

Margery sobbed again.

"I was young and foolish, [illegible]"

And then—but you and I are too old, reader. Suffice it to say that the Captain Christopher stared no longer [illegible]

People were shocked that [illegible]

THE DEMOCRAT.

FOR PRESIDENT,

JOEL PARKER,

OF NEW JERSEY.

Subject to the Decision of the Democratic National Convention.

Call for the National Democratic Convention.

The National Democratic Committee, by virtue of the authority conferred upon them by the National Democratic Convention, at a meeting held at Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of March, 1868, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States to be voted for on the 4th day of July, 1868, at the city of New York,

The basis of representation, as fixed by the last National Democratic Convention, is divided by the number of Senators and Representatives in Congress of each State under the last apportionment. Each State is entitled to as many delegates as it has Electors.

AUGUST PEABODY, Secretary.

Washington, February 22, 1868.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic electors of the State of New Jersey are requested to meet at their usual places of voting in their several townships and wards, at such time on Tuesday next as may be convenient, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M., and appoint two delegates for each township and ward, and also the requisite number of alternates, to represent the Democratic citizens within such Township or Ward in the proposed said Convention, at a State Convention to be held at TRENTON, on WEDNESDAY, the 11th day of March next, at twelve o'clock M., for the purpose of appointing Electors, Delegates to the approaching National Convention to be held in the City of New York, on the 4th day of July next, and Vice President of the United States.

By order of the State Committee appointed by the Democratic State Convention held at Trenton, on the 11th day of March, 1867.

DAVID BAIRD, Jr.,
Chairman.

J. G. G. WOOD,
Secretary.

RADICAL TACTICS

Impeachment was a desperate attempt to remove the President when no other obstacles in the way of the radical party could be overcome by the exercise of legitimate power. It was a blow aimed at the Constitution and the supreme law of the land. Its object is by this assault upon the executive to overthrow the checks and safeguards of the Constitution, and thus open the way for the negro reconstruction scheme and all its consequences.

The radical leaders represented to the people that this abominable scheme of ruling the States of the Union, by handing them over to the rule of the blacks enfranchised by congress, could be accomplished without peril to the liberties of the country, so long as the executive power remained in the hands of a conservative man. They kept ground hostile upon this point, but failed. Stalwarts, who in their hearts are as much opposed to negro rule as Democrats, were driven into the support of the measure by the cry that the President was about to overthrow the reconstruction laws. They were afraid to trust the people, lest the people should not be as much afraid of negro rule as they were themselves

MACHINE POETRY.

"The Sing'er" "The Singer"—the best in the land,
Is the pride of all households—useful and grand;
It is the friend of the poor man, and sought by the rich,
Because it relieves them of many a stitch.

Look at "The Singer"—in beauty and grace
It bears off the palm, and holds the first place;
It is simple in movement, unerring, though swift;
And what is essential—it is easy to lift.

It does hemming and braiding, will cord, tack and bind:
In fact it does all things, to suit every mind;
You can work on the finest of fabrics with ease,
And then on materials as coarse as you please.

If the proof of the pudding in eating consists,
Then give me a trial, examine my lists;
I ask but the trial—I know the result,
You'll never again other agent consult.

There are other Machines, very good, it is true,
But as advertise freely, so what they will do;
We do not dispute they will do what they say,
But we hold that "The Singer" is better than they.
