

DEMOCRATIC AND REGISTER
O. A. DOUGLAS, EDITOR
SATURDAY DECEMBER 24, 1864.

NOTICE.

The Democrat during the coming session of the Legislature will contain a full report of the proceedings of that body; and those desiring to know what their representatives are doing will find it in their almanacs to take the Democratic Terms, 20 cents in advance. This paper will be furnished from the present time until the close of the session.

INTERNAL REVENUE STAMPS OF every description for sale at the Absecon Bookstore, and at the County Clerk's Office, May's Landing. Also the Card containing the stamp tax on every article requires stamps.

Holiday presents in every variety can be found at the Absecon Bookstore.

ANOTHER NATIONAL BANK.—The banking institution, hitherto known as the Bank of Jersey City, is, we are informed, soon to be converted into National Bank.

THE JOURNAL OF THE STATE OF N. J.—now in the hands of State Superintendent of Public Schools, is changed to Plainfield, N. J., New Jersey papers copy.

FOR a few days since, a company in Jersey City presented their paper with an album, on the pages of which were one thousand dollars in greenbacks.

THE Bank of New Jersey, at New Brunswick, has been converted into a National Bank, under the title of "The National Bank of New Jersey."

THE Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey has given power to make payment a legal tender for all debts.

THE War—The Foreign ministers of the United States have voted to increase the number of Minister Day. Mr. Dayton was a citizen of this State, and respected by all parties. Our State loses its old-time sentitive in his death.

THE NEW JERSEY PRISON has elected Rev. Mr. Jeffreys, of the State street, M. E. Church, Moral Instructor of the Institution, in the place of Rev. George F. Brown, resigned.

COL. P. D. ELMER, Esq., of Burlington, has been appointed Adjutant of the S. Jersey Division of the U. S. Army, Second District, Mrs. Josiah C. Spars, Esq., reported.

A TERRITORIAL supper will be served at T. D. Winner's Hotel, Somers Point, on Friday evening, the 23d. Heretofore these suppers have given general satisfaction, and we presume will have no reason to detract from the mode of entertainment at the convention. A general adjournment is expected.

ATTORNEYS continue to make of persons who have had law suits. For example, Mr. Smith, who was recently engaged at Portsmouth, N. H., on a suspicious trial, implicated in the matter, and a great many have gone on from Fitchfield to see if they can identify him.

THE PHILADELPHIA COURIER—During the present month have been forwarded to Philadelphia, three or four publications containing news of the war, and a sum of $75,000 Boston, to go into the hands of this business. Son, with which I am through these stocks, and a great many more will have to wait a week.

THE PASSPORT SYSTEM.—Secretary Seward has issued an official order, requiring all persons entering the United States from foreign countries to furnish a passport, excepting emigrants going to or from the United States. Mr. Seward says that this regulation is intended to apply especially to persons preparing to come to the United States from the neighboring British provinces.

ANOTHER DRUGSTORE.—A new one will be opened at Somers Point, on Friday evening for "20 cents more." Those of our Regulators friends who find that another drugstore will take place in King Avenue, are advised to buy their supplies of truth, but we suppose that will not be so, as they desire to sustain the King to every thing. By the way, we have a number of their complaints of the taxes, but we could not get any information from the vendor to the effect that he had paid such a heavy tax.

TERRESTRIAL THOUSANDS.—Twenty-five thousand wadens are receiving passes under the law passed recently.

Twenty-five thousand wadens made by the Southrons, and the same number by the Northrons, and the same number by the shells, its cannon balls, and bayonets, its wads, its campfires and pyrotechnics.

Twenty-five thousand receive passes; however, they do not wear the wad. And, as far as who got on the last, many do not know whether their husbands lie under Southern soil or English in a Southern prison, while the N. J. cavalry is engaged in the field, and wait for the day when they may be free.

TO CONSUMMATE.—Dr. A. N. Douglass, of Newark, who is the Medical Director to the Army, who fell on the last, many do not know whether their husbands lie under Southern soil or English in a Southern prison, and wait for the day when they may be free.

A temporary paper to be started next month in Portion, Mo., to be called the Old Oak's Breath.

The War.

In our last issue it was stated that a report was in circulation to the effect that General Sherman had captured Savannah. This, however, has turned out not to be true, but the report is that the rebels had been a ringer prevalent that he had demanded the surrender of the city, but it was unconfirmed. He made an attack upon Fort McAllister, which was repulsed, then again upon Fort McAllister, which was again repulsed, and communication with General Foster. Gen. Sherman estimates the garrison of Savannah at fifteen thousand, commanded by Gen. Hardee. The rebels have in marsh, probably, strength. Twelve miles was the average distance marched each day, and once a week the army halted for an entire day.

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane offered a resolution instructing the Committee on the Conduct of the War to ascertain if any loyal persons were engaged in any of the traitorous movements, offering to the Committee on Military and Affairs to instruct to inquire into the expediency of suspending the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense." The bill to suspend the enrollment for three years, I have no warrant to believe, was introduced by Gen. Hardee, and it was referred to the Committee on Military and Affairs, and was rejected.

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Wednesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Thursday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Friday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Saturday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Sunday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Monday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to provide for the national defense."

On Tuesday in the Senate, Mr. Lane introduced a bill to amend the act of Congress, "so as to provide for the enrollment of men for service for three years, and to make such

