PICKEREL FISHING OPE

SPORTSMEN REPORT YEAR UNSATISFACTORY.

Good Bags Were Scarce, But Plenty of Species Remain for Breeding - Revision of Laws May Be Made.

One of the poorest hunting seasons in the mals of local sportsmen closed Thursday with the passing of the old year. While game seemed to have been kirly plentiful, the weather and general conditions were such as to prevent many good bags being secured. Gunners report much game left for breeding purposes next year, The Winter pickerel season opened yesterday nd it will now be legal to take these gamey fish until February, when the season will again be losed until May 20. It is unlawful, howe to take them through the ice. The law is plai on this point. It says: "It shall be unlawful of Presbyterian ave, $3,500.

or drawn beneath such loe," The manner of fishing for pickerel in Winter differs from that of trolling in Summer. Live balt in deep water, where the fish lurk in cold weather, is used. Sportsmen are few who folow the rod in January, but those who do and are successful in finding the hiding place of this warrior of the water are amply repaid for their venture. The fish is at its best both for angling and the table in cold weather, Live minnows are considered the hest hair Dissatisfaction is expressed by many sports nen at the working of the new game laws, which may be revised this Winter. That meas are dividing the State into two game rec has evidently proven unsatisfactory thus fer. War ou Jersey mosquitoes will be waged during the coming year with unabated vigor. This is a work in which all the people of the State take an interest. The "bird" is little liked and its total destruction will be hailed with delight by residents and increase the popularity of the State and sea shore resorts with visitors. Says the Newark Star: "All that has been expended to date by the State for mosquito extermination is $34.858. The Legislature seven years ago passed a bill authorizing the expenditure of about $5,000 a year, a pitifully small amount for a work of such great importance to the State. Municipalities have cooperated and expended appropriations in addition, and it is due to municipal enterprise that the labors of the State entomologist have had the good hunter, wh results announced in his annual report. If press reports from various counties of the State are an authentic indication, the direct primary law has failed to give general satisfaction. Says the 'Trenton State Gazette'':

"The result of the test to which the direct primary has been put in New Jersey and other States does not show that the interests of the people are better conserved by it than they were under the fornier system of nominating in conventions composed of regularly elected delegates representing the people and for whom the people were given an opportunity to vote The man who doesn't believe in party organization of course approves the direct primary, but party organization carries responsibility with it that makes it answerable fathe people for falsdand dishonest move that it may make.

Under the present system with the neld open towny man whin wants to test his popularity with the people, and is able to. pay the cost, there is no responsibility borne by either party or organization for the quality of the man who wins. Up to this time the direct primary has fulled of its purpose in the State

It is perhaps premature to pronounce judgment on the new system until it has had a thorough trying out. When the people become accustomed to the direct primary the results may prove more satisfactory.

War on Jersey mosquitoes will be waged during the coming year with unabated vigor. This is a work in which all the people of the State take an interest. The "bird" is little liked and its total destruction will be hailed with delight by residents and increase the popularity of the State and sea shore resorts with visitors. Says the Newark Star: "All that has been expended to date by the State for mosquito externination is $34,858. The Legislature seven years ago passed a bill authorizing the expenditure of about $5,000 a year, a pitifully small amount for a work of such great importance to the State. Municipalities have cooperated and expended appropriations in addition, and it is due to municipal enterprise that the labors of the State entomologist have had the good hunter, wh results announced in his annual report. Nearly ning eighteen thousand acres of marsh lands have been drained and nearly two and a half million feet's ditches dug to destroy the breeding places. Govell's Joke

By WILLIAM MORRIS, JR.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated

Literary Press.

All Balmoral, with the exception of Dan Betterley and his sister, thought Colonel Covell's joke a good one. The Betterleys were excepted because the joke was on Dan and the talk across: the bar of the Brindle Pup saloon was hushed on those rare occasions when Betterley favored the place with his company. At other times men slapped each other on the back and roared as Covell detailed the progress of events. The toke had sprung from a careless remark made by Rob Henders when Julie Betterley had refused to marry Howard Wetton on the ground that she did not want to leave Ben alone to keep house in bachelor discomfort. "Some one would do Wetton a personal favor by marrying off Ben," suggested Henders, and the rest of the crowd shouted with delight at the idea of the silent Benjamin marrying.

"But he wouldn't know how to ask n girl," suggested Colonel Covell. "Some one would have to pop the question for him. By John Rogers,' he added, "I think I'll do it for him! I've a maiden aunt back east who's been crazy to get married for more years than I've lived. Her name's Adorn Dedrick, and she must be about sirty now.

"She's got a little money, and she may think that he's marrying her for that, but she'll take him. We'll carry along the game until we've proposed for him, and then we'll let Ben get the answer or else we'll bring the old lady on and let him fight it out with

"That would be great," declared Henders approvingly. "Let, her walk right up to him and put her arms around his neck and say 'Darling!' I'll bet that will scare him into talking." "I'll be one to help pay the old lady's traveling expenses on this here excur-Mon." broke in Denver Bill, who dealt bank, "What will it cost?" "Say $400," suggested Covell as he took off his hat and threw in $20. 4 In a few minutes more than the needed sum had been realized, and, calling for pens and paper, Covell wrote the first letter, while the rest of the crowd

Betterley was not disliked in Balmoral, but his taciturn ways and his refusal to make one of the crowd that nightly thronged the Brindle Pup marked him a man apart from the rest. Hence the crowd was willing to pay for the pleasure of seeing his amazement when his undesirable bride elect should appear. Unmindful of all postal regulations. the postmaster agreed to let Covell have the letters addressed to Dan Betterley should any come from the little New England town where Miss Adora Dedrick lived. Presently it came, a heavy letter in which Miss Dedrick expressed a willingness to correspond with a man so well recommended by Cousin Covell.

"I guess she's forgotten you, Col," suggested Henders when this line was reached, but Covell merely grinned appreciatively and continued to read. There was little to laugh at in the letter. Indeed, more than one in the crowd wished there was some one back east who would write letters like that to him, but Covell's vivid descrip tion of Miss Dedrick's overripe charm. and the thought of what Dan would say when the arrived kept the joke alive during the correspondence that followed. Finally when Miss Dedrick wrote that she was sending her picture and the accompanying photograph proved to be that of a comely girl scarcely out of her teens Covell rolled on the floor in his delight. "Cousin Adora was that old before they knew how to take pictures," he insisted. "She must have begged this of a photographer. I think that it's time to spring the joke now. We'll send her the money to come on with and ask her to start at once. Dan will see this picture, and when Cousin Adora comes I reckon he'll be some surprised."

ability to wait longer for his bride and begging her to come west at once.

A few days later a telegram telephoned from the railroad town to camp announced her start, and when they had learned the sense of the message the plotters allowed it to be delivered, while at the same time Miss Adora's last letter and her picture, in- and one finally says: closed in the original letter, were placed back in the postoffice and delivered to Dan that evening.

The Brindle Pup kept open until 4 o'clock in the morning that the earliest news might be learned, but Dan gave no sign that he was disturbed. A scout reported that his shack was disappointment followed when it was seen that a heavy automobile veil was impenetrable. Dan came forward, and the arrival turned to him. He led her up to his sister, and the three climbed into the Betterley buckhoard and were off to Dan's shack before the camp fairly realized that it was being robbed of its fun.

"It's going to be curious when she takes off that there vell," said Henders, with a sigh, "but it's darned mean that we dan't declare in on the deal. I sort of feel that I've been cheated."

"Same here," chimed another voice. and, though Covell urged that there still would be plenty of fun, he was decidedly unpopular for the moment. In an effort to change the humor of the crowd he invited them over to the Brindle Pup, and they were still having drinks at his expense when Dan Betterley strode in and drew Covell to one side. "Look here," he said quietly, but with a ring of determination in his voice, "Dora has been asking for 'Cousin Covell,' and I suppose that means you. If it does you are at the bottom of this trick. I want to know what it all means."

"It was a sort of joke," explained Covell, who did not appear to be greatly enjoying the "joke." "Some of the boys thought that you ought to be married, so's Julie could marry Howard Wetton, and I remembered that I had a Cousin Adora back east who's been wanking to be married for the last fifty years, so I thought I'd make the whole lot of you happy and"-"And you did the writing," concluded Dan. "From what Dora says I gather that there were a number of letters I never saw. I want them." From the salodn safe Covell extracted the package of letters and silently turned them over to Betterley.

"I suppose you know what the punishment is for illegal use of the mails?" he asked, raising his voice. "The first hint from any one that reaches my wife's ears to the effect that she was the victim . a rotten practical joke will bring a postal inspector here who ing over will see that you get what's coming to him"you!"

"Your wife!" gasped Covell. "You don't mean to say that you're going to marry that mummy!"

"You won't have to,' humbly. "I've acted like a hound puppy, Dan. You needn't be afraid. I'm only too glad tha joke's been switched."

"Same here," said Betterley, more contentedly. "You fellows come up tonight. There's going to be a double wedding, for now Julia can marry Wetton. You're a pretty good joker, colonel!"

"I ain't no joker," declared Covell, with more emphasis than grammar. "I'm one of them pretty pink Cupids that they have on valentines—and I'm rather good at the job too."
