Skinner _& Thorpe to Establish Industry in Shoe Factory Building Through Efforts B. Frazler Company.

Another step forward in the industrial development of May's Landing is under way; The building known as the "she factory" at Eighth Street and Perry Avenue will be occupied and operated as a cut-glass fletory just as soon as repairs can be made, an engine house built and machinery installed. This is indeed good news and means much for the progress and general prosperity of the municipality. This new industry will be owned and oper ated by Messrs, Skinner and Therpe, of Hamnonton, who were induced to establish a cut-Daniel B. Frazler Company, of Iniladelphia, owners of the building. The company at its own expense made liberal inducements to Messrs Skinner & Thorpe for the decupancy of the building and thereby secured for May's Landing what will doubtless prove to be large and substantial industry. That this new enterprise will be sound ar permanent is attested by the well known suc cess which has been achieved by Mr. Skinne in this same line of manufacture at Hammor ton, where he started on a small scale a very few years ago, and he has steadily built up th business until he now employs more than on large annex to his present factory, thereby providing for an increased output through employment of a large additional number of hands. Mr. Skinner is also President of th Hammonton Trust Co. Mr. Thorpe has long been associated with Mr. Skinner in the cut glass business. He is a practical and con petent manager, and will reside be and hav active charge of the works. It is almost certain that the achived at Hammonton by Mr. skinner wil be repeated here. The general design of the building is well adapted in every yay for such purposes, and when repairs now under way are complete, the projectors expect to have one of the finest plants in the State factory will prove a most welcome addition to May's Landing's industrial list. One of the most daring attempts at escape able and should not be repealed. The length ever made by a prisoner at the County Jail of time for the killing of deer in this State is occurred Thursday morning when Lehman also at the present time sufficiently long. For Middleton, a white youth, sentenced to a term myself, I would rather approve a bill which of three years in State Prison for robbing a cottage of furniture valued at $700, jumped lutely for at least three to five years. If we are through a second story window in the corridor to have deer in this State in any quantity it is of the jail into a coal-bin and thence to the Court yard. His attempt failed, however, for Edward Webb, a colored "trusty," heard the constables call and spied Middleton jumping mals are so numerous and multiplying to the fence that surrounds the yard. He gave such an extent in South Jersey that four chase and overhauling the fugitive overpowered him and held him until the constables came to his aid.

Middleton fought stubbornly but was conmeasure because of the needless suffering ininto Court almost immediately and Judge Higber added two years to his sentence, making a total of five years for the theft to which he pleaded guilty and his attempt to escape, Mr. A. MAY'S LANDING, APRIL 16, 1910.

Decisions in the higher courts sustain th popular opinion that a man's fade is his own property, except in the case of donvicts. By civil suits in several notable instances, persons acquitted of crime have forced the removal o their pictures from the "rogues' callery," I has long been held that a company has no right to use anyone's picture in an advertise ment without his or her permission, This is in line with common sense and justice.

Cruelty to animals embraces a number thoughtless or careless acts and practices fo which ignorance of the suffering caused dumb brutes is largely responsible. What tales would some unfortunate creatures unfold if they could find tongue! Horses driven with pain-racked limbs; farm stock exposed bitter cold and storm; dogs tied to unclean, uncomfortable boxes for long periods, without exercise and sometimes lacking ford and drink —the list is too long to enumerate, certainly too long to be compatible with any pretensions of charity and kindness.

Bright indeed is the outlook for a prosperou year for the municipality. With both cotton mill and brick yard in full operation and a cut glass works about to be started, there will be employment for everybody, which insures the general welfare and presages an era of progress and civic development. Now is the time for the Board of Irade and Other public orga nisations to get together for a conderted effort for a greater and better May's Landing; for finding and "knocking" and turn to and help "boost" for all he is worth.

One of the dangerous features of spitting or the public walks and highways is the scatter ing of disease germs in the dust that arises from the avenues. New York is Lading the campaign against the practice and more than a thousand arrests have been made recently for violation of a municipal ordinance probibiting spitting in public places. The promotion of sanitary conditions by laying the dust with water is a feature of the hygenic crusade now under way in most of the larger diles and in ors or the small towns inreligiout the country. Another argument for nunicipal street sprinklers.

No better news could come to May's Landing than the good tidings of the establishment of will give another standard industry, which employment to about one hundred hands at high wages and thus increase the number of permanent residents, the trade of houses, the progress of public institutions and the value of property. The new cut-glass works about to be established in the factor on the Egg Harbor City boulevard about the best thing that has hap bened here years and every citize industry, to be operated by Messrs. and Thorpe, of Hammonton, expermanufacturers, is due to the efforts of the Daniel B. Frazier Co., owners of t who made liberal induc the firm, thereby securing for May's Landing what will doubtless prove to be a large and substantial industry Restrictions upon land-owners by State lay in regard to burning brush are not severe and every such person should comply with them the forest interests of New Jersey. Th of destructive forest fires under the new law has been greatly decreased and woodland owners are thousands of dollars in tocket for that reason, therefor they should conscientiously uphold the statute by complying with its provisions themselves and urging their neighbors to do likewise.

The importance of preserving the forest cannot be overestimated. Not only does wooded country preserve healthfulness, promote a salubrious climate and enhance the value of the large tracts of unsettled land, but it provides for the future needs of the wealth in lumber supply and Forestry is one of the most important of the age and every land-owner become familiar with its practice, for his own Cronberry growing in South Jeley will eventually become the leading industry of the State if the development of large Pacts of inland incadows and swamp bottom, during gress of the work in the future. New Jersey already furnishes a large portion of the lowland berries and if all its vast areas of meadow 20x30 ft. Everybody Was Named Smith.

By CLARISSA MACKIE. Copyright, 1910, by American Press

While Mary Smith was visiting her rich cousins, the Drews, in the city she met Ralph Meldon. He asked permis-

East Bay for several months after that. At last he closed his rooms and went down to his brother's farm, some ten miles distant from East Bay.

The next day a lumbering stage carried him over to East Bay and deposited him before the postoffice. pleased Ralph to walk down the crooked village street and pick out the house in which Mary Smith lived. . A brown church stood at the corner where an intersecting street made a sharp triangle. Next to the church was a tiny white cottage bowered in honeysuckle vines and lvy. Tulips and hyacinths made gay the brown earth borders on either side the neat path that led to the front door. Instinctively Ralph turned in at the gate and strode up the path. It was not until his hand had lifted the brass knocker that he remembered to look for the conch shell on the purch. The door opened, and a neat maidservant looked curiously at his town cut garments.

"Is Miss Smith at home?" asked Meldon confidently. "Yes, sir; walk right in."

"I am Miss Mary Smith." "Then I have made a mistake in the house. I hope you will bardon the intrusion," said Meldon quietly as he passed through the door.

"It's a common enough name," rejoined Miss Smith less acidly as her visitor went down the steps. She looked admiringly at the tall, well setup figure as he stepped briskly up the "He must be looking for May I dare say he wants summer

Ralph smiled to himself as he boked at the next cottage to the one from which he had been almost forcibly ejected. It was quite as attractive as conch shell on the front porch.

In response to his knock a pale; tired looking girl came to the door. "I am Mary Smith." she said in answer to his carefully worded inquiry.

"Thank you," said Ralph relievedly." As he walked up the next heat graveled path Ralph Meldon was painfully aware that "Smith" was not an uncommon name in East Bay and that sea captains were as thick in the village as the proverbial bees in a barrel of sugar. A half hour before there had been but one Mary Smith in the world. Now Mary Smiths confronted him at every turn or every door.

At last he would see the Mary Smith -his Mary he had boldly defermined to call her one day. At this point in his reflections be mounted the steps and came upon a white whiskered old gentleman swinging in a canvas hammock on the porch. The polished boots, the blue cloth suit with brass buttons, the keen gray eyes under bushy eyebrows, denoted the seafaring man. He raised himself in the lammock and peered inquisitively up at his visitor.

"Captain Smith?" queried Meldon. "Here!" bellowed that old salt, seting a blue cap on his snowy hair.

"My name's Meldon. I had the pleasure of meeting your daughter at Mrs. Drew's last winter, and I asked permission to call and see her." Ralph felt himself growing warmer under the sparkling gaze of the old captain. "Never heard of you!" he bellowed forth, and then, lifting his voice into an angry roar, he called, "Mamie!" There was a sound of hurrying footsteps-heavy footfalls quite unlike the tread of Mary Smith's fairy feet-and the front door opened and ejected a oyung woman, rosy cheeked, fat, quivering with flesh and curiosity.

"What is it, pa?" she demanded. Captain Smith drew a clay pipe from his beeast pocket and indicated the Opposite the church was an imposing red brick house, homely of archi-"I don't want my life insured," she tecture, but breathing forth comfort and at this moment even gavety. Strains of music drifted from the open windows, and a long stretch of striped awning made a tunnel from the gate to the front door. Into this tunnel Meldon marched regardless of impending festivilies or that he was an uninvited guest. The front door was open, his hat and stick were taken away by a flut tering maid, and he was left in the shadow of a wide doorway where he could see down the vista of a long room filled with people. He awoke to the fact that the orchestra had been playing Lohengrin's wedding march. and now the strains died away, and the measured tones of a clergyman

A Slang Phrase. "Bull con," a slang phrase which means to flatter, to praise with ulterior motives, had its origin in the west years ago. When the gold brick game was started the bunko men sprang a fine, high sounding combination of words upon the simple farmers. They called it an investment in "bullion consolidated." Years after the words were cut down to "bull con" and came that to his name. Mine's Cap'n John used to describe the method of flat-
