

CAFE OWNERS PROMISE TO CLOSE ON SUNDAY

JUDGE COLE PLACES THEM ON GOOD BEHAVIOR.

Two Indicted For "Open House" Plead Not Guilty and Will Stand Trial—Violation in Future May Mean State Prison Sentence.

Fifteen Atlantic City cafe owners appeared before Judge C. L. Cole Wednesday last and entered pleas to indictments charging them with violating the excise laws. With the exception of two, all pleaded guilty, and after pronouncing to obey the law to the letter in the future, were out on their good behavior, and had sentenced deferred. Max Fisher, proprietor of Hotel Schütz, and Victor Presinger, of the Old Virginia, entered pleas of not guilty. Those who entered pleas of guilty as indicted were: J. J. Flanagan, Kentucky and Atlantic Avenues; Edward B. Becker, Albion Cafe; Harry Epsteinbeck, Rockford Cafe; William Hyman, Isleworth; John McConnell, Clubby's; Bernard Koban, "Barney's"; Fred May, Florida and the Boardwalk; Isaac Hyman, Ind Pavillion; Louis Hyman, Isles Hotel; John P. Weiss, Marshall Cafe; Albert Weiss, New Jersey and Atlantic Avenues.

ROW IN SQUIRE'S COURT.

One Witness Called Another Liar and Wordy War Ensued.

The dove of peace had a rude shock Saturday last in Magistrate Andrew Gillespie's office, when Harry Becker, becoming incensed over testimony of Harry Becker, interrupted the witness and made some unparliamentary remarks relative to the veracity of his record. Becker replied in kind and told Aaron he "would knock his two eyes into me." The irritable gentlemen were just about to mix it up when Constable Sam Taylor took a hand in the matter and promised them both a whipping if they didn't behave, whereupon they turned the force of their oratory towards the officer and Magistrate Gillespie closed the argument by holding Aaron for Court on a charge of breach of the peace.

Fire Alarm System and Water Pressure Will Be Tested.

At eight o'clock Monday evening next the fire alarm system, consisting of the bell at the Fire House, the whistle at the County power house and the bell at Sugar Hill, will be tested, and at the same time test will be made of the water pressure through different lengths of hose, one and two streams. Firemen are requested to be ready at the Fire House at 7:45 sharp to prepare for the test. Members of the Fire House Company will be posted at several places throughout the municipality to observe the effectiveness of the alarm system.

A number of Atlantic County convicts serving time in the State Prison were paroled Wednesday last by the Court of Pardons. Malone, receiving stolen goods, 1912, one and one-half to three years; William Neely, grand larceny, 1912, one and one-half to seven years; William J. Lynde, grand larceny, 1913, one and one-half years to seven years.

Will Save The Old Trees.

While engaged in inspecting Main Street Saturday last, which is to be taken over as County boulevard, State Commissioner E. A. Stephens expressed sincere admiration for the grand old oaks trees of May's Landing. "Not one will be touched if it can be helped," he said, "so far as I can see the only ones that will have to be removed will be the old trees along May Avenue. Let us preserve the old trees as long as we can, for they will soon die. The people of May's Landing should now be planting young trees to take their place."

Burley Bagged Big Cat.

The many friends of Mr. Henry Burley will be pleased to learn that he is getting along nicely in Florida and enjoying good health. He writes that the climate is splendid, and that he has plenty of hunting. Recently he killed a wild cat nineteen inches high and three feet long, which, to use the current expression, must have been "some cat." He also bagged a large alligator with his rifle.

Many Admire New Bank.

THE GOLDEN KEY

By ELSIE B. MATTESON

Tom Brinkwater began life as a local boy and became a multimillionaire. While making his money he married a woman with social aspirations. Mrs. Brinkwater's desires in this respect were gratified in the place where she lived, a western city, but no sooner had she conquered in that field than she grew ambitious for a larger and more important one.

But her husband did not become a multimillionaire till the two had been married long enough to have a daughter seventeen years old. To introduce this daughter, Rosamond, into the big, rich, and at the same time the most difficult social swim in the western world, then became Mrs. Brinkwater's ambition. As for Rosamond, she was very well satisfied with the friends she had and did not care to enter a new field. She was much loved by those who knew her intimately, and though no one knew it but her self, was very much predisposed to a certain young man, MacDonal Sherburn, a young lawyer, and a life partner. Not even Mr. Sherburn was aware that a heart was ready for him to gather and court the girl who had been the rapidly growing daughter of Mr. Brinkwater would have made the young man backward in gathering it.

There were three grades of refinement in the Brinkwater family. Tom was presentable among well bred persons, and that was all that can be said of him. Mrs. Brinkwater had acquired a good deal of the savoir faire of a society woman. Rosamond was a lovely girl in her own home and among her intimate friends, but there was an underlying oddness about fashionable society that repelled her.

The thing that the doors of the east of New York society were closed against her only stimulated Mrs. Brinkwater's ambition. She began the study of the situation. Unmarried ladies were at her disposal, but there were hundreds of wealthy families who were at the same time, and who were not. Mrs. Brinkwater was not the girl who let for the highest and noblest, and brought one that took first prize in a free show. In this way she got some fine advice. In the course of a year she had become a society woman. Then a social success, she sought a suitable social position in the arena of the show. By these two means the lady's name was becoming known, and she knew that if she could have her affairs arranged in a suitable manner, she could succeed in the social game. So she set the suffragette and saved herself the trouble.

This, at first, was pleasing to the eyes of the old Mrs. Brinkwater, who, when it brought her in touch with a number of New York social leaders. But this did not mean social popularity. The gold was not yet in sight. The aspirant had not yet been invited to the house of a single family prominent socially.

One day while discussing suffragette business with a lady who seemed inclined to be friendly, Mrs. Brinkwater told her what she had done to get into society and asked what more she could do. Then and there for the first time the hunter for the portal by which she might enter had the secret revealed to her. It was the touch of gold that the gold must be expended in the right way. The information was a friendly one who had been born in the same. Their fortunes had faded.

The same evening when Mrs. Brinkwater told her husband that she had found the key to New York society and that it was money he replied, "I'll draw you a check for a hundred thousand dollars and you can start."

"Not so fast. The way it is done is more important than the money. You are a director in several corporations, wouldn't you like to see some of them?"

Not long after this Mr. Van G. received the appointment. He was given a rosewood desk at the office of the Brinkwater Manufacturing company, and his salary was paid in advance. Occasionally some duty was assigned him, but he was not required to perform it unless he chose to do so.

The Brinkwaters were invited to dinner at the Van G's and at the homes of several other families connected with them, all in the same way. Those doors having been opened, others followed suit. Within half a year after the turning of the golden key the aspirant, her husband and her daughter found themselves members of the charmed circle.

But Tom Brinkwater spoiled this social achievement. One of his former business associates, who had also made his millions, came from the west with aspirations similar to those of Mrs. Brinkwater. Tom was asked how he did it and let the cat out of the bag. As soon as it was out it ran no longer through the golden portals. The Brinkwaters were dropped.

Mrs. Brinkwater was furious. Tom was crushed with remorse at what he had done. One of the family was not disappointed. Rosamond Brinkwater found the social drinking and cigarette smoking of the women in the swim, not to her taste. She went back to her former home on a visit and did not return. While there she married the young man she wanted and took the society of her native city for her own. She did not enter only to be shut out at the beginning of the first act.

The Joins of the Acrobat.
Everybody has seen the acrobat dislocate his joints. By means of flexion and contortions that have been practiced from a very early age the spinal cord has been converted into what is to all intents and purposes a rubber tube. He can throw his head low enough to put his neck between his legs and bend his back into a bow almost as complete as that of the first class circus man has classified the joints of his body and says that the all parts of his body are almost always perfectly straight. They do not carry the weight of his body, but they are the parts that are subjected to the pressure of his body and the pressure of his body is the pressure of his body.

The Man Who Is Half Sick.
A physician recently remarked that "it was an awful punishment to be only slightly ill and have nothing to do." The man who is only half-way sick, if he has nothing to occupy his attention, soon grows morbidly introspective, and his mind becomes filled with exaggerated notions of his condition. Disease grows and flourishes under such conditions. Regular employment is conducive to health. Work keeps the blood active and the mind away from the physical condition. Health.

Neck Rings.
What the women in the Shan Mills of upper Burma want is a long neck. Beauty is estimated from the extended head and neck. From childhood the women wear tight rings of brass about the neck, and at the slightest relief from the strain another ring is added. Besides the rings around their necks, they wear heavy rings on their legs. New York Post.

Hope.
Hope drives a generous contempt upon disease and looks like a hand some piece of good fortune as who should say, "You are somewhat from being a boy, but I shall conquer you." Jeremy Taylor.

The Separation.
Hogan did Cheney's wife get a separation? Hogan. She did. Four cops tore her off him. Brooklyn Life.

Economy.
Knicker. What is your wife's idea of economy? Better. She eats food to save it. New York Sun.

HOPE.
Hope is the better side of doubt. Hope is mental therapeutics; it is the laboring oar that carries the boat ashore, it is the sail away on the horizon that betokens the long expected ship; it is the palm tree on the edge of the desert, promising refreshment to the fainting traveler. He who loses hope loses everything.

Clerical Humor.
When the Rev. Dr. Snow rose to address his evening congregation his voice was slightly husky.

"My friends," he said, "I have already preached one sermon and made two long speeches to societies in different parts of the city, and before I have finished this evening you will think I am like a wheel—the longer the spoke the bigger the tire."

Only a few appeared to see the point, however, and the good doctor seemed to furnish a diagram.—Chicago Tribune.

Just Between.
A man caught a heavy cold during the changeable weather and concluded to take a spell in bed. His wife came into the room and said:

"Jim, there's a visitor for you."
"Oh, thanks," Jim growled. "I'm too sick to see anybody."
"But it's our pastor."
"Thunder! I ain't sick enough to see him!"—Newark Star.

Chinese Paper.
Blotting paper is not used by the Chinese. Their paper absorbs the ink as it is applied.

Many a man puts his money and his faith in a specimen and later on draws out his faith.—Walter Pulitzer.
