An Organized Epidemic

It Cured, or Was Intended,
Some Chronic Cases.

By MARTHA McCULLOUGH-WILLIAMS.

Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

Minerva's name was "one of fate's subtlest ironies, the girl was so far—so very far—from ysis. Indeed, she knew no more than to be sweet and biddable to crabbled task-mistresses. They were the Grimley sisters who had taken her, as they said daily, out of charity and to whom she served for hands, feet and eyes. She was rated sharply if she talked back, which was seldom, since she had rather a talent for silence than for speech.

The sisters were not consciously unkind. It was just that they had fallen into the way of fretting at everything. Life had defrauded them of the natural outlets—husbands and children. Therefore they made the most of such small worries as remained to maiden kettlemakers.

Minerva came to them when she was ten. For the next eight years her appetite and her trick of breaking things, especially those she was handling with utmost care, had served as vital grievances. But since she was full grown she ate much less and hardly ever let fall anything, no matter how fragile or precious; hence the Miss Grimleys had had to invent a new sin for her. They had chosen to find it in her possible future husband. According to their notion, she was always intent upon matrimony and scheming to ensnare whatever masculine person chance threw in her way.

The young circuit rider, for example; Jim Mace, the constable, who rode by the big gate every other day; the two Leonards, who farmed the lower place; even the young fellow clerking over at the crossroads—hadn't he actually tried to get board at the Grimley mansion? Dr. Bell, the one person who dared speak up to the sisters, rated them soundly for such suspicions. No wonder, he said, poor Minerva, as shy and modest as any white rose, was awkward, almost rude, indeed, to all the young fellows she encountered and therefore likely to die an old maid.

Miss Jane and Miss Abby nodded approval there. Minerva was to have everything when they were gone. It would be quite enough to keep her like a lady. Husbands were but worries most of the time. As for children, they shook their heads and sighed. Clearly, in their judgment, a woman was lucky to escape such things. Look at Minerva herself. Where would she be if the Grimleys had not chosen that better part?

Dr. Bell, who had a tongue as rough and a heart as warm as his greatcoat, growled at them. After awhile, being a strategist, he did something else—something which at first blushed made him laugh a great shouting laugh. When his wife asked the meaning of it he said enigmatically:

"Oh, I'm going to cure some chronic cases by provoking an epidemic."

And that was all she could get out of him, no matter how hard she tried. She could not try very hard, since, like the rest of the neighborhood, she was giving all her mind to the coming session of the synod.

It was to be a great occasion. Ministers, their wives, sons and daughters were coming by the score. Their number would not be too great, however, for the countryside's hospitality.

With no provocation whatever from the church Dr. Bell fixed it so the Grimleys would have rather more than a double share of the clerical indifference. Deacon Brandy and his wife, Dr. Henshaw, a pulpit samson, just beginning to look about him over the edges of weeds not yet rusty; Professor Balderson, famed for persuading money into college channels, and young Lee, not yet come to full ordination. How the doctor managed all this is not known. He was almost unscrupulous when it came to carrying out a plan.

At least two other households were full of bitter jealousy over the parting out of guests, but the guests did not suspect it—least of all those fated to sit at meat with the Grimleys.

Miss Jane was a famous cook. Miss Abby was past mistress at preserving. Minerva made cake that was simply heavenly, and black Susan was a miracle of efficient strength in the kitchen. So the visitors rejoiced that their lines had fallen as they had. Indeed, all through synod week they could not say enough in praise and gratitude to their hostesses. As a consequence, Miss Jane and Miss Abby forgot either to scold or to suspect. Carried away by the tide of hospitable impulse, they showed for what they were—excellent gentlewomen of the first rank.

As for Minerva, she fairly blossomed. Even the most cautious onlooker saw in her a new creature. She was so radiant, indeed, that before three days were out Professor Balderson, a seasoned bachelor, made up his mind to marry her if he could. He changed his mind after good Sister Brown had let fall words of wisdom.

"It's providential," she said, nodding toward Minerva and young Lee. "If ever anybody was cut out for a pastor's wife it's that sweet girl, and I'm mighty glad to believe both of them have found it out."

Slight observation brought the professor himself to the same belief. For half an hour he was right down crest-fallen; then he flung up his head and actually whistled. Possibly the sight of Miss Jane had nothing to do with it. But certainly that afternoon and all through the days following he kept pretty close to her. Miss Jane was in a state of mind. It was plain as a pike staff that that man, Henshaw, was making up to Sister Abby—Abby, who had never before tolerated anybody's courting.

"He must have bewitched her. That's all in theory. I can account for it," she confided, almost weeping, to the professor upon Saturday afternoon. "Something ought to be done about it. It's ridiculous at her time of life. I don't understand it a bit."

"No, but it may be the cooking. Dr. Henshaw's a good man, but not wholly above earth," the professor comforted wisely. "Besides, can you quite understand a man's loneliness is something dreadful. He has just about had time to find out how much he misses his wife. In that he is worse off than I, who have been lonely so many years."

"Well, it was just because you chose to be," Miss Jane snapped, then could have bitten her tongue.

The professor positively beamed over her intimation. "I wonder if you can hear the right," he murmured. "Honestly, now, dear Miss Jane, if—if I found myself greatly attracted by a most superior woman of suitable age do you think I should have any chance?"

"You'll have to find out for yourself. One woman never knows about another," Miss Jane retorted, but with a blush that would have done credit to Minerva.

The professor took her hand. "But suppose it is not another?" he asked. "Suppose I dare raise my eyes to you?"

If Miss Jane had felt what was coming the sudden certainty of it overwhelmed her. For the first and last time she fainted outright, and most gracefully notwithstanding her 150 pounds, upon the professor's shoulder.

Minerva came running to them, exclaiming anxiously: "Fetch Dr. Bell! And keep Aunt Abby away!"

Afternoon service was just about to begin. In the stir and confusion of getting the crowd inside the church it was easy to mask Miss Jane's faint as something else.

"Oh, I—I—turned my ankle," she herself said, sniffling the salts Sister Brown held under her nostrils.

"Then we must take you straight home," the professor said as one in authority, looking into her eyes while he nodded toward Minerva and her sweetheart.

Miss Jane began to say faintly, "Abby—where is she?" But Sister Brown checked her with a significant smile.

"Don't you worry about Miss Abby," she said. "Just let them put you in the barouche and go along. Dr. Henshaw'll see to it your sister gets home all right."

Then Dr. Bell exploded. When he could speak for laughing he said, wringing Miss Jane's hand heartily and beaming on the professor:

"It has worked splendidly. Get home, all of you. I'll tell Abby everything and make her likewise tell me."

"What has worked?" Miss Jane demanded, suddenly forgetting her turned ankle and stamping her foot. The doctor looked quizzically from her to Minerva, then on to the professor and young Lee, whence his eyes wandered to Miss Abby and her prize, just now coming up to them.

"My organized epidemic," he said, with another great laugh, "of matrimony, to be sure. It hurt my feelings to see three fine wives going to waste."

For once Miss Jane had no word ready. The professor was likewise silent. But young Lee spoke up manfully:

"You were exactly right, doctor, and no man could have done a better deed." "So I can say 'Bless you, my children' all round," the doctor queried.

Young Lee's eyes twinkled. "Sure thing," he said. "You see, Dr. Henshaw begged me to fix things with Minerva so Miss Abby would have no excuse to make him wait."

"She didn't think of me, I suppose," Miss Jane said, sighing. The others smiled. Sister Brown spoke for all of them. "No; she didn't forget you," she said. "But all of us have seen how it would be these last three days."

Not a Nature Student. She was not a nature student, and when she saw a sparrow on the sidewalk, evidently too young to fly and too badly frightened even to hop, she did not know exactly what to do for it. She did not know how it had got there, where its parents were or what relief measures would be advisable. All she could do in her perplexity was to keep the group of boys who had gathered around it from harming it and to see if any of them could suggest a course of action, for she was well aware that in these days of nature study the veriest school infant knows more about birds and their like than many an older person.

Presently a big boy pushed through the group, looked at the bird kindly, then stooped and took it up. She was much relieved. "Will you take care of it?" she asked him. "Sure!" he responded, with inelegant emphasis. She was anxious that it should have the best of care, so she suggested helpfully: "Better give it a little milk."

The boy stared. Then he grinned, then he yelled. "Milk!" he roared. "Milk! Ha, milk!" Then he streaked up the sidewalk, carrying the bird carefully in his hands and derisively ejaculating, "Milk!"

Her face flushed as she went on her way, and she was heard to murmur to herself: "Now, I wonder why he laughed. Very unmanly, I'm sure."—New York Press.

Roundabout Treatment. There is a story told of a Welsh doctor who went to settle in a Welsh village, and the first night of his arrival he was sent for to attend a child. He looked at the little sufferer very attentively and then delivered this opinion:

"This baby's got the measles, but I ain't posted up on infectious diseases. We must approach this case by circular treatment. You give the little child this draft. That'll send him into fits. Then send for me. I'm a stunner on fits."

Harry-James made a big pile of rocks with that little sell of his. John—Yes, and he's got a bigger pile now and a smaller cell.—Exchange.

Obeying Orders.

When Luther W. Apple joined the Confederate army he was a lad of seventeen, one of the boys who made Thomas Jonathan Jackson "Stonewall Jackson" and who bore a noble part in the conflict. In "From Bull Run to Appomattox" Mr. Hopkins recalls some of the thoughts and acts of his first night on a battlefield.

"We were ordered to 'sleep on our arms' the night whose dawn was to usher in the battle. I had heard a good deal about soldiers obeying orders. I thought of the boy who 'stood on the burning deck,' so when I lay down that night, with old Mother Earth for a bed, I stretched myself out at full length on top of my musket. It was a little rough, but the mere thought of being a soldier and 'sleeping on my arms' on the eve of battle made my bed feel as soft as a bed of roses."

"And then the gun," it was an old black musket minus the flint and no powder or ball. But I was at least a soldier and had a gun and would surely see the battle and write home about it. A soldier seldom thinks he will be among the slain. He may be wounded or taken prisoner, but it is always the other fellow who is going to be killed."

Curious Telegraph Lines.

The most original telegraph line in the world once extended from La Paz, the capital of Bolivia, to the neighboring town of Oruro, a distance of about 150 miles. There are no growing trees in this part of the world, and wood of any kind is so rare that the telegraph poles were made of the same material as the natives' household furniture—dried mud. The pillars were built on stone foundations and measured about five feet square at the base, with a tapering height of 300 feet apart. Another curious telegraph line was constructed in Uganda by a British engineer, who transported growing trees to the roadside and used them as poles because he could not find any "dead" wood that would withstand the ravages of the white ants. In Dutch East India growing trees are also turned to telegraph poles, but there a wire is stretched across the road between the trees on either side and the actual telegraph line suspended down the center.

In a Bad Way.

"Where are you off to in such a hurry?"

"To fetch the doctor for my husband."

"What's up with him?"

"He tells me he has got hepatitis, dyspepsia, rheumatism, enteritis, gastritis, appendicitis, nephritis and cerebro spinal meningitis."

"Holy terrors! Where did he get all that?"

"Why, a man induced him to buy a medical dictionary, and he's just been reading it."

A Whist Story.

When Lord Thaneset was imprisoned in the Tower of London for the O'Connor riot, three of his friends, the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Laval and Captain Smith, were admitted to the whist with him and remain till the stock up hour of 11. Early in the sitting Captain Smith fell back in a fit of apoplexy, and one of the party rose to call for help. "Stop!" cried another. "We shall be turned out if you make a noise. Let our friend alone until 11. We can play dummy, and he'll be none the worse, for I can read death in his face."

Apollo Belvedere.

The celebrated statue, Apollo Belvedere, is supposed to be from the chisel of the Greek sculptor Calamis, who flourished in the fifth century B. C. It is called the Belvedere from the Belvedere gallery of the Vatican, in Rome, where it stands. It was discovered in 1503 among the ruins of Antium, and was purchased by Pope Julius II.

Kindheart—So your father's ill and can't work? It's very hard to have the breadwinner ill. The Kid—Yes, sir, but it might 'a' been worse. It might 'a' been mother, an' she's butter an' cheese an' meat an' larders an' coal an' boots an' clothes an' rent winner all in one."
