"Now, mother dear," said Jane, "we simply must fix up the horrid house some way. I can't have Ted's mother see such a place."

"Why make prefense, daughter? This Is the way we have lived for the last four years."

"Yes, 1 know," answered Jane, "but it Isn't really our way of living. We are only walting until father's peach crop is a success. But to an outsider -this place looks as if it belonged to a Hill Billy, 11 would class us with them forever."

"Doesn't she like you for yoarself, June?" asked her mother anxiously, Yes, of course, she has been a per fect dear ever since Ted and I becaute engaged. She made my last week in college the brightest of all for me." "Well, dear, what could we do to this room?"

"We'll do a lot of things to it. In the first place, I asked Ted to bring his mother and sister the day father is in town to be gone all day. I know he wouldn't have any sympathy with the way I feel about this and it will all be over by the time he gets back." Mrs. Wilson and her daughter were sitting early pre-summer morning inthe only downstalrs room in their house. They had come from Pennsyl vania four years before when Nathan fel Wilson had invested all he had in a peach orchard in the Ozarks, where one crop with favorable weather con ditions would bring him a fortune. He had worked hard to bring his orchard to a state of perfection, but always some unfavorable occurrence hindered the long looked for bumper crop.

When his wife had protested agains their going to the farm, because Jane's education might be hindered, he had assured her that there was a good university in the town a few miles away and that Jane should have every advantage. He had been able to keep his word and Jane, who had just fin-Ished high school in Pennsylvania, entened the college. She was now gra/luated and again home for the summer.

She had always been a great help to her mother when she was home. She made all the clothes for the family, put up fruit, cooked, and even helped her father out of doors. Partnership

The making of even the most ordinary telephone call involves a partnership of at least three persons.

The effectiveness of the service depends on the degree ot. team-play existing between these three partners-the person calling, who co-operates by consulting the directory and calling by number always; the operator, by making the connection quickly, courteously and with the maximum degree of human accuracy; and the person called, by answering promptly.

Greatest satisfaction of service is attained-when the second partner, the operator, is accorded the same consideration and courtesy which she is always anxious to show the other two members of the partnership.
