AN AUTUMN RAMBLE.

'Tis but a dim o'ershadow'd day. While only transient gleams Of sunbeams o'er the hilltops play, And mist-like kiss the stream.

I've wander'd through the woodlands wide, Where fern and lichen grow; I've climbed the mountain's sloping side, Where red tea berries glow.

My hands with forest gems are fill'd, My arms with tinted sprays; My soul is with that pleasure thrill'd, Which nature wakes always.

Yet, still the sky is overcast, The blue all drap'd with gray; The sun seems brooding o'er the past As night broods over day.

Mayhap the season feels the woes A suffering people bears, And with tear dripping eyelid shows The sense of gloom she shares!

The Faithful Guest.

There was something, I forget what, to take grandfather and grandmother away from home one day in October of the year I lived with them in Burn's and after I had tucked in grandma's opening a volume, composed myself to iron gray silk skirt and ran back to the read. house for grandpa's spectacles, and had seen the gig vanish in the distance, I felt lonely. Burn's Hollow was a lonesome place at atl times, and the handsome, rambling mansion, which might ghostly air about it, when one wan-
