There is nothing the matter with the backbone and no lack of clear ness in the head of the average Ameri can. The fierce competitive life has cared for the development of these parts. It has made the American the leader in the material things of the world. He sees more clearly the road to money and travels the road more directly and with a stiffer backbone than the men of any other race. As a type he is the most efficient money making machine in existence. This acquired

THE OLD HOME.

An old lane, an old gate, an old house by a tree. A wild wood, a wild brook-they will not let me be; In boyhood I knew them and still they call to me.

Down deep in my heart's core 1-hear them, and my eyes Through ther mists behold them, beneath the old time skies, 'Mid bee boom and rose blossoms and orchard lands, arise.

I hear them; and heartsick with longing is my soul To walk there, to dream there, beneath the sky's blue bowli. Around me, within me, the weary world made whole.

To talk with the wild brook of all the long ago; To whisper the wood wind of things we used to know When we were old companions, before my heart knew wos.

To walk with the morning and watch its rose unfold: To drowse with the noontide lulled on its heart of gold; To lie with the nighttime and dream the dreams of old.

To tell to the old trees, and to each listening leaf. The longing, the yearning, as in my boyhood brief, The old hope, the old love, would ease my heart of grief.

HREE WISHES

An infant in fts cradle slept. And in its sleep it smilled-And one by one three women knelt To kiss the fair-haired child: And each thought of the days to be And breathed a prayer half silently.

One poured her love on many lives, But knew love's toll and care; Its burdens oft had been to her A heavy weight to bear. She stooped and murmured lovingly: "Not hardened hands, dear child, for thee."

One had not known the burdened hands, But knew the empty heart; At life's rich banquet she had sat, An unfed guest, apart. "Oh, not;" she whispered, tenderly "An empty heart, dear child, for thee.

'And one was old; she had known care, She had known loneliness: She knew God leads us by no path His presence cannot bless. She smiled and murmured, trust fully: "God's will, God's will, dear child, for thee." -British Weekly.

IFTH AVENUE was deserted, or hearly so. Now and riage drove up to some stately mansion, returning late revelers from opera or reception. Only one pedestrian was risible. He was walking with the slow, uncertain gait of one whose mind was not wholly made up is to future action. Now and then between the lights he halted, and with his hands in his pockets studied the wavering shadows upon the pavement. He traced one idly with his toe, then moved on again into the light. As he came under the arc the current, that had been dim and uncertain, flashed out its white radiance, showing a tall, shabbily-clad figure, crowned by a face that but for its thin, cadaverous look might have been handsome. There was a look upon the face, too, that augured ill for somebody or something-a fierce, savage expression that sat illy upon its thinness.

A carriage drew up to a tall corner mansion and a young man alighted and went lightly up the brown stone stens. A flood of red light swept outward through the open door; the young man disappeared within it, and the carriage drove away in the darkness.

The tall watcher leaning against the iron railing shook his gaunt fist at the house and at the retreating carriage. He stood there for some minutes, then came forward slowly and sat down upon the steps. He put his hand in his pocket and drew out a revolver. It was a handsomely mounted affair, and might have been a relic of better days, or one purloined for the occasion. He looked down at it with a strange fascination. In the dim light the fierceness died out of his face, leaving a white, stony calm 'Up the avenue came the roll of another late carriage. He got up quickly and slipped around the side of the house, taking refuge again in the shadows by the iron railing. While walting for it to pass he looked up and saw a window open on the second story. A strong growth of lyv led up to The lights were out on this side of the house. There was but a moment's hesitation, then like an agile squirrel he leaped upon the vines and clambered unward. He sat upon the window sill for a few minutes to get his breath, then found himself in a dimly lighted hallway. Just in front of him a door opened a little way, as though the occupant of the room had carelessly pushed it to without storping to fasten it. He listened for a moment. All was quiet within. He fancied he heard sume one breathing or murmuring regularly as though in sleep. A bright light was burning within, its slapting shaft plercing the gloom of the hallway. He pushed open the door slowly, cautiously, and looked In. A young mirl of about ten or twelve was kneel ing by the bedslde.
