"When I give my consent to your marriage with Ellen Hosmer I shall be either an idiot or a lunatic, and she shall be at once installed mistress of De Lisle Hall."

Halph De Lisle was not to be hoodwinked by any pretty devices of the young man or his mother. He followed Herbert about the house like his shadow. Mrs. De Lisle was vexed; her son was angry. "As old as I am," be muttered-

Ralph de Lisle came near choking at first with rage and disappointment, and we are very sure that the quantity of good things provided for the wedding feast was not much diminished or their quality appreciated by the gloomy visaged head of the house," but he followed his son's advice, and said nothing, and soon learned to listen to his wife's oft-repeated rehearsal of the old edage, "What can't be cured must be endured," with something like acquiescence in the decrees of Hymen. In a short time he became more than reconciled to his son's choice, and when he heard of the marriage of Isabel he actually felt sorry for her husband, as Isabel was such a Tarter, and in no way comparable to Ellen, his sen's wife.-New York Weekly.

Thed Meh. 25-19

General Trepost, the mancof blood and iron, who now wields autocratic power as governor general of St. Petersburg, comes of a family detested in Russia. His father, also a general, held the same position in the Winter Capital twenty-five years ago that his son now occupies. He was known as the "Emperor of St. Petersburg," and droshky drivers used to inmble of their seats, go down on their knees and bump their foreheads on the curbthe street. It was at the elder Trepoff that Vera Sassalitch, the first woman terrorist in Russia, fired a revolver, but the bullet went wild. Pour attempts have been made to kill the present General Trepost, but he seems to bear a charmed life. The present governor general won his gory record while chief of police at Moscow. There his 'repressive" tactics resulted in the sacrifice of many lives.

Announcement.

On and after March First, 1905, the stock, good will and fixtures, belonging to the estate of the late M. Mendel will be transferred to the undersigned. All patrons of this old and reliable store will receive the same honest and straight treatment, which has characterized this store in the past 25 years, during which, its motto has been, "Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Refunded."

In order to facilitate our work, and open up with an entire new stock for Spring, there will commence Saturday, 28th inst., a Clearing Sale lasting until Marchlist, and the remaining stock will be sold at prices which will be money savers to all purchasers. Thanking you for past favors and begging a con-.

tinuance of your valuable patronage.

Yours Truly,

JOSEPH MENDEL, Executor.

Senator Bradley says the Storey collapse is overwhelming in its scope and victims. His bill was drawn by Prosecutor Lloyd, of Uamden County, and if it becomes a law an effort will be made to prosecute the owners of the Sterey Company, although it is feared they are now herond the jurisdiction of this Com-

School House for McKee City. The proposition of the Board of Education to establish a public school at McKee City and to spend $1200 for that purpose practically met with no opposition at the annual school meeting held here Tuesday night and the project went through with bells aringing. There were 85 votes in favor of the propo sition and 13 against. The meeting elected the following trutees for terms of three years each: Messrs Albert C. Abbott, Lewis W. Cramer and rank R. Moore. These ap ropriations were also voted: Purchase of fuel, $250.00; repairing school houses, $500.00; current expenses, $500.00; pur-03.00% gettique fins skood gniess 03.00

Learning His Value

R. MARCUS WILKINSON B. MARCUS With a sat alone in his office, with a dainty little perfumed note between his fingers, and a puzzled frown upon his brow. The note, directed in a graceful and feminine hand, was

Dear Guardian: I will be at the office at 10 in the morning, to consult you upon a matter of importance. "MILLIE."

."A matter of importance," muttered Mr. Wilkinson, twisting the note nervously. "Can my fears be true? Has Cyrll Ormsby proposed to my pearl? I am afraid he has! And what can I say? What can I urge against the man, if Millie's own instincts have played her false? Ten o'clock!"

The last silvery stroke of the mantel clock had not died away when the door of the office was opened by a clerk and Millie Bently entered the

Just a few words to describe the ward of whom Marcus Wilkinson always thought as a pearl, a lily, everything pure and fair. She was of medium height, alender and graceful, with a thoughtful face of exquisite beauty. Very young, only 18, Millie Bently had borne early the sorrows of life. Her father, having been wealthy, had failed in business, and committed suicide. Her mother, delicate and helpless, had fought poverty feebly for two years, and sinking under privation and oil, had contracted a fatal disease. When all' hope of life was over, the news came that Millie's uncle, dying abroad, had left a large fortune to his only sister. A will was made by the dring woman, leaving her own too lately won independence to Millie, and Pappointing Marcus Wilkinson guardian Sorrowing and womanly, beyond her years, Millie had turned her own grief to a noble endeavor to solace some of the trials of those with whom her own poverty had made her familiar. A cousin had come at Mr. Wilkinson's request to make a home for his ward, and she resumed many long-interrupted studies. But a large portion of her time was spent in the humble homes of those who had been her mother's friends in the dark days of her widowhood; and her gentle charities soon extended far beyond this small circle. She had been an orphan two years on the day when she came to seek Mr. Wilkinson, as already described, and the sorrows of her life had lost some of their bitter sting, leaving only a gentle sadness behind.

"Well, Millie," the old gentleman said, "what brings to me the pleasure of seeing you to-day?" "It. is about myself," Millie said.

"She wants something enormous," said the old gentleman, addressing the walls. "Whenever I am Uncle Marc. I know what to expect next." But just then the kindly man detected signs of trouble in Millie's face; and the jesting voice was turned at once to one of tender gravity.

"What is it, my child?" "Cyril Ormsby came to me last evening, and he will come here to-day; but I wanted to see you first. He wants me to be his wife, Uncle Marc, and"she hesitated here—"you do not like

'Who told you that?' No one: but I see it for myself." "Well, you are right. I do not like him. But my like or dislike has no control over you." "No control!" Millie's voice was pitcous. "Please don't talk so. 'I come to you as I would have gone to my father." "There, dear, I was wrong. Tell methen; as you would have told your father, do you love Mr. Ormsby?" "I think he is the noblest man I ever knew. If you could see him with some of my poor people, how gentle and courteous he is, you would like him, too. He has given me so much sympathey in my work, Uncle Marc, feeling, is i de that the possession of great His is but a stewardship." And so was your love?"

cannot yet realize that a man se noble and so good can really desire my companionship and help in his life. But, since he does, I am glad and proud to have won his confidence." "Hem-yes! Enthusiastic but heart-should like to have you see. When we come back I will tell you why I dislike Cyril Ormsby, if," he added mentally, "you have not already found out." It was not exactly such a walk as one would have meaned out for a centieman's invitation to a young, beautiful girl; but Mille fellowed its course, leaning upon her guardian's arm, wondering a little but never besitating. past the respectable portion of the

"For a noble philanthropist, partly owning these factories and this quarter. Mr. Ormsby seems neglectful," said Mr. Wilkinson, dryly. "I have an pressed in the looks of his ward, and interest in the factories, as you are led Millie out into the wide passages aware, but do not own one of these again, to another work room. wretched houses. They are all Cyril Ormsby's."

"But," Millie mid engerly, "these people will not let him benefit them. They use his charity for drink; they abuse any privilege he gives them, till he is discouraged in his efforts to de them any good."

"Oh! step in here!" It was a poor place, scantily furnished, and cheerless. Upon a cot bed a woman lay, in the last stages of consumption. She looked up eagerly to Mr. Wilkinson.

"I hope you -e better," he said, kindly. "No: I shall mover be better. If I may only die in peace, it is all I ask." "Mr. Ormsby will not disturb you "May I?" whispered Millie. "Just as you please, my dear. Perhaps this dying woman or her child may drink up your charity.'

"Hush, hush!" So tenderly, so delicately, Millie mave her charity, that there was only deepest gratitude awakened, without the galling sense of obligation. She left more than sufficient comfort for some vecks and promised to send delicacies for the invalid.

No word of herself passed her lips until they were once more in the narrow street.

"Oh, Uncle Marc," she said, "can it be true that he is so hard, so false to "Wait." was the brief reply They went into the wide courtyard n whose space stood the four great factories, the joint property of Marcus Wilkinson and Cyrll Ormsby, long be fore divided by the entirely opposite management of these two distinct departments one entirely under the control of the elder, the other of the younger man. "Wilkinson's absurd soft-hearted nesa," as Cyril mentally characterized it, had made this division absolutely mecessary. But it was not into his own kindly governed, well-ordered departments that Marcus Wilkinson led his ward. He turned into a small room, where a pale man was busily writing, and at the same time overlooking a long room where about seventy girls were at work before busily whirling machin-

"Thank you, sir!" was the reoly, in dejected tone. "I can't well quit work, sir. There's the wife and six little ones, you see."

"Have you told Mr. Ormaby the doctor says that you life depends upon a few weeks' rest and pure air?" "Yes, sir. He's not keeping me: but he says if I go he must fill my placeand that means starvation for my family. I could never get another situalion, as feeble as i am Boy tone; "and a few weeks' rest may save his life." At this moment Millie shrank a little nearer her guardian. Through the window from which Mr. Watkins over looked the loom room, the could see Cyril Ormeby walking briskly about, his voice harsh and imperative, finding fault here and there, and keenly scrutinfising every item of the work. Out again amongst the homes, where her guardian had no control, but bestowed his kindly charity without ostentation; and here more eloquently than ever, Millie heard how cruel a mockery were all the schemes of charity and philanthropy that had been poured into her ears. It needed no spoken words from her guardian to tell her that the noble words uttered to win her were those of hypocrisy, which knew how it could best plead its cause with her. One and another, turning to Mr. Wilkinson as to a friend, unaware of the torture of their words to the kindly lady beside him, told of cruel exactions of work in sickness and trouble. of closest calculation of time, of small wages and heavy rents.

"If we don't live here and pay, we get no place in the factories!" one said. when asked why he did not seek a more healthy quarter. "I am doing evertime to pay for my child's funeral," one said, "for I lost the wages for three days. I stayed by to see her die and to bury her." "I am uneasy about the rent," another said, "for I lost a week by a fall on the ice, and it's hard making it up again."

Not a word of kindly sympathy or help, in trouble or sickness. The 'hands' under Cyrll Ormsby were simply human machines to do so much ork, sick or well, or pay the price of an hour or day of idleness, no matter how necessary. There was no word spoken as Mr. Wilkinson and Millie walked to the office again. Once there, the old gentleman spoke very gravely;

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:-Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"About nine months ago I was a great sufferer with womb trouble, which caused me severe pain extreme nervousness and frequent headaches, from which the decter failed to relieve me. I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Veletable Compound, and within a short time felt better, and after taking five bottles of it I was entirely cured. I therefore heartily recommend your Compound as a splendid uterine tonic. It makes the monthly periods regular and without pain; and what a blessing it is to find such a remedy after so many doctors fail to help you. The late Augustin Daly, in spite of the gloom that ever seemed to envelop him, had his pet story, which the few persons who were at all intimate with im personally must have heard over and over again. It was about a Jerseyman, who, casting his eye along Broadway for a "likely show," was attracted and tempted by the highly colored posters announcing a spectacular piece called "The Forty Thieves," and determined to spend the evening in the heatre where it was offered. He went to the box office, laid down a $5 bill and asked for one of the best seats. A bunched coupon and $3 were handed him. When he asked what the ticket cost and was told $2 it was evident
