> A THAMP stole into the Catholic church at Corona, Long Island, to enjoy an unmolested night's rest. Burglars also stole in to rob the alter. They stumbled over the sleeping tramp, who, being scared at what he supposed to be ghosts, raised a terrible alarm. The burglars were even more frightened, thinking the church was infested by ghosts. They fled, declaring that they would never again try to rob a church. The grateful priest gave the tramp a suit of second-hand apparel, and the a lemon; now spread out the mixture tramp thinks it was a lucky night's lodging for him.
