counting dialects and slang." "Why do I like Jimmle?" said Henry, musingly. "Because he is a jolly good fellow and knows how to talk. suppose."

So they sat now in front of a cheerful fire in Walcot's rooms, smoking and talking. Jimmie was chatting away as usual, but there was something a bit distraught in his manner which did not escape the keen eye of his friend. By and by, even Jimmie's fund of small talk seemed exhausted. and each sat smoking and musing.

It was Henry who broke the silence. "Sit up, Jimmie, and talk out like a man," said he, with a laugh. "You know you never tramped all the way up here in the snow and then climbed three flights of stairs just to have a chat. Out with it, man! What have you got on your mind?"

Jimmie looked up queerly, and, finding, the railroad must obey, or its officers may be brought up for copcatching the friendly gleam in the othtempt of Court and summarily dealt er's eye, he laughed himself and replied: with.

"No dodging you, you sly dog! I believe you are a mind reader, anyhow.' "Perhaps I do a bit in that line now and then," answered Henry, with en assumption of great mystery, "and to nrove it to you, I will tell you that you came up here for no other purpose than to tell me that you have gone and got yourself engaged."

"Now, how in thunder did you know that?" asked Jimmie, sitting up in astonishment. "You look guilty," answered Henry, with one of his peculiar, almost inaudible_chuckles.

"But I never told you that I was even paying attention to the girl whom I am to have the honor of marrying." declared Jimmie, protestingly. "You could not have had any idea of it."

"Now, Jimmie, my boy, do give me credit for using my powers of observation occasionally," protested Henry. "So!" said Jimmie, "then maybe you have used them far enough to tell me the name of the girl."

"I undoubtedly can," averred Henry. solmenly. "Stunted as my powers of observation may be, they have been sufficiently powerful to enable me to
