A CONVERT.

I'm ready fur the simple life, I'm waitin' for the day, When sweetling is peaceable, without a sign of fray. I'm stred o' fightin' snowstorms, I'm tired o' choppin' wood-A simple life is somethin' that I feel would do me good: I've adivered in the mornin' when the dawn was sing and bleak, Lys took gaining and alters fill my stomach's gotting wask, An 'Pas waith 'most impatient for the time to compalong. When the sum is shinin' inty and the world is all a song

Swinging in the hammock underneath the spreading tree. Keepin' jest a little bit awake, so's not to miss. The perturns of the clover minigled with the sephyr's king. Fve had enough of battle with the printers righters power; I yearn for peace and quiet. I can stand it by the bour. It's fine to be a bero an to conquer in the strife. But I'm getting good an' ready to adopt a simple life. Washington Star.

"THERE seems to be room" says the Atlantic City Review "for the amend ment of the law concerning the holding of Coroners' inquests. At present, the discretion as to the holding of that inquiry rests, not with the Coroner, but with the Coroner's Physician. As a result of this singular and unusual provision, the pecticle of a Coroner's inquest is presented, when the community is not convinced that it is necessary. The protection of human life requires the inter position of an inquest when doubt exists as to the method of death, accompanied by suspicious circumstances tending to show the probability of foul play. But when a County Physician is able, at discretion, to say that an inquest shall be held, when there is neither suspicion, nor | Bils, of Tuckshoe, were the guests of Mr. and visible ground for doubt, it strikes the Mrs. L.
