Science and Invention

The liquefaction of gelatin in old canned meats has been found by Dr. Dixon to be due to bacteria. As analysis was postponed both by infection and feeding, he concludes that canned meats that splash on being shaken are dangerous unless boiled before use.

PERFUME AFFECTS MARRIAGE.

Theory of a Famous German Doctor.—Recent to a correspondent of this country whence comes so much light and learning.

Professor Jaeger, that famous German hygienic prophet, informs us that as long ago as the eighteenth century it was discovered that the perfume of a musk had been known to have dire effects, being particularly disliked by men, and that, coming from one beloved, it had even been proved to change affection into aversion.

He quotes a case in which two passionate lovers had actually been eternally separated as a consequence of a little musk on the lady's handkerchief.

It is a matter of regret that this subject has not been more fully treated in the past, for the heart saddens itself at the thought of the thousands of little girls who are in the habit of what is once known as "toilet water."

Dr. Jaeger cites another case also, in which a young man, who was a student at the University of Bonn, was so much affected by the perfume of a young girl that he was obliged to leave her.

It is reported from Canadian sources that the government of the Province of Ontario is considering the advisability of withdrawing from sale or lease the as yet unsold nickel lands within its territory, and reserving them for the use of the British imperial government.

THE BAD BOY.

She knelt beside the bed where lay the boy Who all the weary day had been so bad; Tears wet her cheeks, and prayer was on her lips The while she drank grief's gall in bitter sips. "If you but knew, my boy," I heard her say, "How you have hurt me through this living day, Or that your name's the burden of my prayers."

And then she prayed till hope came back to her And happy tears replaced the grief-drops' blur; She prayed for patience, prayed for light; but more She prayed for the boy for whom such love she bore.

How like her God she seemed while kneeling there How like the Christ who nightly over her Bends, trusting that his love for her may be Such that upon the morrow I may see More meekly on his errands here below, Some day that boy must feel love's thrilling thrill— I yet may learn to do my Master's will.

Baltimore American.

FROM GENERATION TO GENERATION

There was no death dance, no wailing, no burning. Of the survivors of the horrible massacre, Sikra was the only one unscathed. When the first ray of daylight thinned the blackness around her, she crept out of her covert, back to the scene. The white men were gone, but their work had been well done. The grasses were dabbled with blood, the pools were dotted and red, there were still faint groans from the dying and mocking grins on the upturned faces of the dead.

In the midst of the mangled bodies, Black Wing lay dead. Sikra was a squaw; she did not know how to swoon and drip tears, but the sun was high before she moved a muscle or drew a deep breath. When, at last, she awoke, she brushed over the sand, slowly down the bay there was not a sound, not a sign of life.

The government was held responsible for the massacre by outsiders, and the object of hostility on the part of some of the chiefs was clear as the sun. The perpetrators, perhaps afflicted with Surenia, although suspected, were never charged with the crime, but as time went on it was generally conceded to be the work of private individuals, who had their own object in view.

As time went on and the Indians were healed into the Hoopa Reserve, the story of the massacre was passed on to the next generation. It was told to the children of the survivors, and they in turn told it to their children.

When the boy Sikra was born, his father told him the story of the massacre. He told him of the white men who had come to the bay, and of the Indians who had been killed.

How warm Frezza. It used to puzzle all thinking people why ponds and rivers do not freeze beyond a certain depth. This depends on a most curious fact, namely, that water is at its heaviest when it reaches 40 degrees Fahrenheit, that is, 9 degrees above freezing point.

NAVAL BALLOONS AND KITES.

Until flying machines are perfected there is not much prospect of realizing Fenimore's dream of the nation's air navy grappling in the central line. But a writer in the London Magazine expresses the opinion that kites and balloons would be valuable in naval campaigns as aids in collecting and distributing news and for purposes of observation by increasing the range of vision.

From the deck of a warship the extent of view is about seven miles. From the car of a captive balloon sent up from the deck the view at an altitude of about fifteen hundred feet extends to forty-five miles. Even at an altitude of only three hundred feet one could see twenty-three miles.

In naval warfare balloons are everything, and in organizing the fire a balloon might be very useful—even more so in case of the bombardment of forts and seaports; for the lookout in the balloon would inform the gunners where to direct the shells, while the ships kept at a safe distance from the land guns.

The increased activity in marine ballooning is closely connected with the progress of submarine navigation. From a balloon it is possible to discover the location of vessels under the sea. With the naked eye objects at depths of from fifteen to thirty feet can be clearly discerned.

The Russians did not out their newest torpedo boat destroyers with a kite. It is said to lift a man a half-mile or more high, and the same government has established three "naval balloons," and has planned to carry out extensive experiments with balloons at sea.

Both kites and balloons have their strong points; they have also their limitations. A captive balloon can easily be blown away by a strong wind, and a great deal of information in a very short time. But it is expensive, cumbersome, can be sent up only when weather conditions favor, and makes almost too good a target.

A kite, on the other hand, offers practically no point for the enemy to hit, and if it was struck the chances are that very little harm would be done. It is simple to use, takes up but little space, and can be flown three hundred days in the year. However, it can easily and safely raise a man to a height of about three hundred feet, substitute for the captive balloon, but can only be utilized as an auxiliary to the balloon.

When Mandy started to wash. When Mandy started to wash, An' starts a-strirrin' up of starch, An' lets 'er sleeves up higher, W'y, then you know 'er 'er is on. It ain't no time to jest, Th' only thing to do is— When Mandy starts to wash.

STORY OF STRANGE BATTLE.

Slave States Resist Attempt to Capture Them by Soldiers. On Aug. 24, 1816, occurred a unique and but little known battle, in which within the British boundary, United States forces, with Indian allies, after the conclusion of our war with Great Britain, which we call the war of 1812, fought against negroes using British ammunition and having, like us, Indian allies, says the Chattanooga Times.

Colonel Nichols, a British commander, had built on the east bank of the Apalachicola River (where Fort Gadsden afterward stood) a fort for a refuge for runaway slaves, that they, with Indians, might attack the frontier settlers. It was garrisoned with British and became an Indian rendezvous and fugitive negro slaves settled for some fifty miles along the river, doing the government's bidding.

After the war of 1812 closed the British withdrew their garrison, but left the fort in possession of the negroes. These had Indian allies, and a negro General, was their leader. The Chattahoochee and Flint form the Apalachicola in the Florida and Georgia boundary, and the fort commanded the Apalachicola and Flint and was a refuge for runaway slaves and a rendezvous for the Indian savages.

Who were the aggressors may never be positively known. We have only our own side of the story. Colonel Olinch, United States Army, at Camp Crawford, above, on the Chattahoochee, was expecting provisions, stores and artillery from Spanish Florida. This is a small briar, filled with burning charcoal, and is carried under the clothing. It is earthenware, protected by wickerwork. When the bearer is in the erect position the kangri hangs on the abdomen, but when sitting it is between the thighs. In Kashmir no man, woman or child thinks it possible to be comfortable in winter without a kangri under the clothes. Other writers have described this peculiar custom, and a reference is made to it in the British encyclopaedia.

Recently some valuable additions to our knowledge of kangri-cave have been made by Dr. Neve, the head of a mission stationed at Kashmir. He proves that the disease is common for he refers to nearly 500 cases. These cases point indubitably to local origin—frequently repeated burns from the kangri—as the cause of the disease. In this respect the subject of kangri cancer offers nothing new, for the fact that cancer originates in local irritation is generally accepted.—Philadelphia Medical Record.

OUR CONSUL AT VLADIVOSTOK. Richard Theodore Greener, Decorated by the Chinese Government. Richard Theodore Greener, United States consular representative at Vladivostok, has long been a prominent figure in the public life of America. He is a lawyer and was born in Philadelphia Jan. 30, 1814. From 1874 to 1877 he was professor of law at the University of South Carolina. From 1877 to 1882 he was dean of the law faculty of Howard University. In 1881 he defended Cadet Whitaker and established a precedent that a cadet at West Point is an officer of the United States Army. He was afterward prominent in politics and came to Boston for services to the Chinese in Siberia in the famine of 1902. He is a member of many clubs and missionary societies at home and has been at Vladivostok since 1898.

BEING OVERCOME BY GAS. Semanition Is Neither Alarming Nor Disconcerting in All Instances. Rev. Dr. George L. Spilling, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of South Orange, N. J., who was nearly asphyxiated in his study in the church a few days ago by a careless workman who shut off the gas and then turned it on again, has written an account of his sensations while overcome by the gas in which he says: "I did not notice the gas until seized by a deadly stupor, which it seemed impossible to throw off. I was seated at my desk. My sight grew dim. I could not see the manuscript before me. Every limb in my body felt as though it was weighted with lead. I had the faintest sense of a heart fluttering and fast losing its power of pulsation. I had no specific pain, and only the weight of a heavy stupor, over which my will seemed to have no power.

BURNS THAT CAUSE CANCER.

Explanation of the Prevalence of the Malady Among Natives of Kashmir. Jonathan Hutchinson, during his recent trip to India, made some interesting observations on disease, and his comments upon them in his usual interesting way. In the Polyclinic appears an editorial on the cause of cancer, which, if we mistake not, is the work of Mr. Hutchinson's pen, for it has all the earmarks of his style and of his turn of thought. The writer of the editorial calls attention to the peculiar form of cancer that prevails in Kashmir—the "vale of Cashmere" of the poets. This variety of cancer is an epithelioma, which is not peculiar in a historical sense, but is merely of peculiar origin. The site of the growth is either the abdomen or the inside of the thigh. Of twenty cases reported by Elmelle as long as 1808 four were in females and sixteen in males.

Dr. Elmelle attributed the disease to a curious local custom of the inhabitants of Kashmir. It seems that Kashmir, which is an elevated valley, among high mountains, has a severe winter climate, and the natives carry what is called a kangri. This is a small briar, filled with burning charcoal, and is carried under the clothing. It is earthenware, protected by wickerwork. When the bearer is in the erect position the kangri hangs on the abdomen, but when sitting it is between the thighs. In Kashmir no man, woman or child thinks it possible to be comfortable in winter without a kangri under the clothes. Other writers have described this peculiar custom, and a reference is made to it in the British encyclopaedia.

Recently some valuable additions to our knowledge of kangri-cave have been made by Dr. Neve, the head of a mission stationed at Kashmir. In this respect the subject of kangri cancer offers nothing new, for the fact that cancer originates in local irritation is generally accepted.—Philadelphia Medical Record.

THE LAST SNAG REMOVED. A large snag was removed from the river by the use of dynamite. The snag was a large log that had been driven into the river by a storm. It was a great obstacle to the navigation of the river, and had to be removed. The work was done by the use of dynamite, and the snag was blown up. The river is now clear of the snag, and the navigation is unimpeded.

THE BANANA.

That which ripens on the plant in the tropics... Not a great amount of ignorance prevailing among intelligent people of the north concerning the growth, production and marketing of bananas.

LITTLE THOUGHTS.

Disappointment is not a sufficient reason for discouragement. Be satisfied with yourself if you will, do not be self-satisfied.

DERIVATIONS OF SOME COMMON WORDS.

One remembers how on the 12th of June, 1215, King John signed the great charter of the constitutional freedom of Britain and how after he had signed it he hung himself in a burst of fury on the floor and gnawed the string and the words which the floors of those days were written. Now, what was "charta"? Originally nothing more or less than a sheet of papyrus strips glued together as writing paper.

Days' Landing Record.

By W. W. SHANKS, Publisher. SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1904.

To the sound of muffled drum a grateful people will vent their way to the silent city to the memory of the Nation's soldier dead.

With the Republican National Convention near at hand and no contest to light the impression prevails generally that the sovereign people generally are satisfied with the wise and beneficent policies of the present administration.

There has been a great deal said about capital and labor and the greater part of it has been said to no good purpose—just to stir up strife and set the man who is compelled by circumstances to depend on his toil and the capitalist who helps furnish him employment against each other.

We are told that the immigration officials are trying again to bar out some of the foreigners who are bled to come here by the padrones and held in practical serfdom. If the system as described is really in force, the youths who come under such conditions ought to be taxed as imported domestic animals.

The learned President of Byrn Maw thinks that if college girls do not marry it is because they are a little difficult to please, and not because they are rejected of men. Yes, indeed, the kind of men who object to a woman because she is intelligent and educated is fast disappearing together with the lobsters of the New England coast.
