Forty Warehouses in One. Pittsburg is building a unique struc ture. It will be known as the termi-Sunday school books that it is getting nal warehouse, but as I matter of fact there will be forty warehouse in one, selverware and nent struggling building is especially designed to pro-

riety of freight samped like and of the great steel center. The wayhouses are located along to be the bound of the Monorigabels River and have inintense wharf and switching taclifies for moving all kinds of merchandise by rail and water. They cover an area of 370x390 feet. are six stories high and have 800,000 square feet of floor space. The first floor is arranged as a terminal station for the six tracks entering the building. Wide platforms give ample room for receiving and distributing freight, and from these elevators run to the separate storehouses. In the search for a fireproof building material it was decided that it would be wisest to go back to ancient Rome for guidance in the building of this modern structure. Burnt hollow tile and brick were judged to be the hest materials that could be used, and the tests to which this form of construction has been put assure users of the Pittsburg warehouses the lowest insurance rates ever given on a building of this character. It is claimed that the completion of these buildings will give that city the most up-to-date terminal warehouse faciliues to be found in this country. The outlay involved was $2,000,000.

77 T was afternoon on one of the last few hot days of summer. Through the open windows came glimpses of greenwood bespeaking a delicious coolness and the ripple of brooks, but in the school room the air was undeniably close. The scratch of a peneil, the shuffling of impatient little feet, the drone of a lazy bee, all seemed to intensify the impression of heat, and the young schoolmaster stirred restlessly.

It had meant a great deal to Peter Raymond, securing the village school at Wimberly. But he had not found his task an easy one. His eyes, wandering over the rows of bent heads, before him, encountered the glance of a girl seated near the door. The girl, one of the older scholars, with a toss of her curl, returned to her book, and the trouble in the schoolmaster's face deepened. Here was the crux of the aituation. If he could win Miranda Hemming lifted her hands. Hemming to his side, the remainder of But it was Miranda herself, with her reat blue eyes, fetching dimples and coquettish ways, who openly led the revolt against him. The teacher sighed again; perhaps he was too young. From the very beginning of his work, however, Raymond had recognized the primitive instinct of hostility to the unknown in the questioning eyes uplifted to his own. Now, after five weeks, he seemed no nearer the solution of his problem; indeed, matters under Miranda's spirited glance were becoming even worse, despite his pointed ignoring of her mutiny. He touched the bell. First class in grammar," he said.

Miranda, with several other girls, ranging from 16 to 18, came slowly forward. It was rather a trying recitation) Most of the girls stumbled. Miranda failed utterly. Nor did she care. To all his questions she answered with provoking nonchalance, evidently indifferent as to whether he were pleased or not. Her rebellion had never before been quite so openly manifest. A sudden line of resolution tightened the young man's mouth.

"You may return to your seats," he said. "Miss Miranda, I shall expect you to remain after school until that lesson is recited perfectly."

"What!" cried the girl. Involuntarily she fell back a step, hardly believe ing her own ears. That anyone should dare address her, Miranda Hemming, in such fashion. Raymond's expression did not change .

"You heard what I said," he returned, quietly. "It should not take iong."

For a moment Miranda, stupefied besitated, then she flounced indignantly back to her seat. The whole school which had dropped all work to listen to the passage at arms between Miranda and the teacher, fairly shivered, and Tom Carruthers, a big, loutish chap of 19, shot a suilen look at Raymond. To scold Miranda! To the quivering excitement of the school, the time until 4 o'clock appeared fairly to fly. Would teacher really keep in Miranda?

When the others arose, Miranda also sprang to her feet, then something in the teacher's expression caused her to am very grateful. "But-" burst out Miranda furlousis. Then she closed her lips with a snap and leaned back, her hands tempestuousiv folded before her. Raymond picked up a book.

"Take your own time," he said pleasantly. But somehow the book did not prove very enthralling. Between his eyes and the printed pages persisted the vision of a willful little face set in its tangle of wavy hair. Yet he must not be beaten now. The world was flooded with the ranquil glory of the moonlight as he went out. A narrow path led to the road where a row of maples lifted their leafy branches to the starry skies and Raymond, fancying that he caught the gleam of a white dress there under the trees, felt-his heartheats quicken. Somehow he had been ooking forward to walking home with the girl.
