Mator of The Record. DEAR SIRI-Will our citizens ever get alive to the needs of water works? If some Moses would only raise up for a Greater May's Landing, a future generation would at east call him blessed. Thousands of tongues advantages of May's Landing. Why should those who set in a still quiet way retard movements or sentiments that would advance war town? Some people are satisfied to sit Winder a green bay tree, or an oak grove and think when two thousand dollars was ezbended for a few oaks, a big thing was done for the town; but like one of old, I my, give his liberty, water works, electric lights, trol-tey line, or death to our town seems possible.

AND INCIDENTS

On the day fixed for the race all Aninalland turned out in their best furs. When this first pair of antiers was laid at the edge of the thicket to mark thestarting place every one gathered around them to admire them. While every one else was looking at the prize the Rabbit, who is a tricky fellow, said: "I don't know this part of the country very well; I want to take a look through the bushes where I'm going to run." .

Then as he hopped away into the thicket he racked his brains for a plan which would make him win the horns. for they were the finest things he ever had seen.

The Judges of the race finally called every one to one side of the horns and then it was discovered that the Rabbit was absent. They sent a messenger to look for him, and away in the middle of the thicket he found the Rabbit gnawing for dear life cutting down bushes to make a path for himself. Whon the Rabbit came out at last the judges accused him of cheating, but he denied it until they all went. wrestle with the other. Some prefer into the thicket and found the path he the right leg to stand on, thinking it

Everybody agreed that such a trickter had no right to enter the race at all, so they gave the horns to the Deer, who was admitted to be the best runner in Animalland, and he has worn them ever since; then the judges agreed that as the Rabbit was so fond of cutting down bushes he might do down from the time of Columbus to opponent will then swing to his right that for a living thereafter, and so he the effect that somewhere among the

"Why, of course," broke in young Randoph eagerly. "You're the American consul at Cairo. I'm stupid not to have recognized you before. My late uncle was a classmate of yours at Harvard."

"I remember Douglas Randolph as one of my best friends," said the consul. cordially.

As they turned to depart young Randolph said suddenly, "I meant to take you to the 'Green Cat' to dine. It's a queer little place, just like one of the student restaurants in the Latin onarter, but perhaps you'd rather dine at the club?

"Most certainly not," said the consul, emphatically. "The 'Green Cat' sounds very attractive. I've been oldso long that I would like to be beguiled into believing that I'm young again. I believe you and the 'Green Cat' can manage it."

The 'Green Cat' proved to be everything that the consul had hoped. Freshfaced, enthusiastic young artists and literary men sat about the neat, ollcloth-covered tables. There was the mame pleasant, excited murmur of student conversation which is so conspicuous a feature of the various cafes in the Latin quarter.

The consul and young Randolph sat rown at a table in the corner, which Wise Beyond Her Years.

He was a curly headed boy with life before him. She was a little girl with saucy pug nose, but wise, it would seem, beyond her years. The fact that she was nursing a doll with eyes that opened and shut with a click may > have been his inspiration. "Say, sister, I think I'd get married if I knew how."

"Oh, that's easy," replied the owner of the pug nose. "First you buy a diamond ring and give it to her; then you buy a gold ring, like mamma's got, and give that to her. And then you must buy her a watch for her birthday." "An' what she give me?" expectanty asked the little chap.

"Why, nuthin', of course," smartly esplied his little companion. "Say, sister," he added, "I guess I von't marry." - Philadelphia Tele-
