MASTER AABON JONES in an address before the National Grange Patrons of high order. Hasbandry in session recently at Atlantic City took occasion to numercifully scon reckless ausomobilists on country roads and his demand for legislation to curb drivers of high speed cars was greeted by applause. Master Johns in part said:

Accidents of the most shocking chai actor have been of common occurrence since the introduction of the automobile and in some sections of the country, travel upon county roads has been re duced to the driving absolutely necessary for pleasure has been entirely out out for fear of accidents. Use of the highways by automobiles should be regulated by in wise laws vigorously enforced with penalties heavy enough to be effectuar warning to others. Uniformity should be sought after in the laws of the severs states with adoption of a more vigorous policy of enforcement, for the lives of our people are of more consequence than the pleasure of the few."

Brotherhood of America.

Michael A. Kenney, the Supreme Washington of the Brotherhood of the Union, has issued a proclamation declaring the new hame of the organisation to go in effect sannary 1 1906. The name will be the Brotherhood of America." The proclamstion is in accordance with the action of the Supreme Circle Convention held at Niagara Falls in October last.

The action taken at the Niagara Falls Convention, changing the name, was the result of resolutions to that effect offered at the ion beld at Wilkes Barre, two years and, and further considered at the Washington Convention a year ago. The question has been agreed for a number of years, and was brought about by reason of the old name being constantly confused with that of labor oreaniset ions. The change of name about being made is expected to mark a new eboch in the history of the organization. The order has already taken an impetus in the way of an incorease in memberahin. Extensive preparations are being made looking to an extension of the work. The unwritten work has just been re-Viced and medernised.

"I'm glad of it lass!" said old Adamson heartily. "Mind ye, I've nothing against Frank. I daresay he's, all right; but of the two I'd sooner trust my daughter's happiness with the young 'un."

And so it was settled. Fred Saund ers had won the bountest lass in Timberport.

The cousins were men of a different stamp. Such a disappointment would have been better met by Fred. Mr. John Saunders, of Brighorough described himself as a "patent agent." He would have been more correctly described as a thorough-paced rascal. John, for a purpose of his own, had kept in touch with his nephews in Timberport.

He wrote the lucky man a congratu letery letter, and he added something n the shape of a postscript, which

For "the credit of the family," as he put it, Fred did burn the letter, but not | urgent messages, while about 58 cents before he had tossed it indignantly was the lowest press rate. The correover the table to his cousin, who shared his lodgings.

Mr. John Saunders was somewhat thick-skinned. All the same his ears fore they could be sent. The Morse tingled as he read the unflattering code can't cope with the 57,000 ideoepistle which reached him next morning from his nephew Fred.

"So! so?" he muttered. "I'm the unhappy uncle of a virtuous nephew, it | English characters and send their messeems. Destroyed my letter, has he. sages in that way. They were read off Ah!" he went on, picking up another letter and opening it; "what have we here?

This second letter was also from Timperport, and its contents seemed to please "the unhappy uncle of a virtnous nephew" much better than did the previous epistle.

"Ha! ha!" he laughed softly, and there was a very unpleasant light in his eyes. "Fred for virtue, Frank for brains! An ax of his own to grind. has he?

Mr. John Saunders committed Fred's letter to the flames. The envelope he kept unlocking a drawer and carefully placing it among his private papers.

One morning, about a week later. Mr. Adamson found among his letters an envelope bearing the Brigborough

With this was the following explanatory note:

"Mr. Adamson: Dear Sir-Some littie time ago I made you an offer for the invention on which you have wasted so much time. You refused to meet me. Since then an obliging friend has: submitted to me a copy of your plans. The scheme is utterly unworkable, my dear Adamson, and I return the plans to their rightful owner. Thus you lose little-and I gain less by the treachmy of a friend. You's truly,

Old Adamson sank back in his chair and was slight for some minutes. When he did speak the words meant much to

"Fetch Fred?" he said hoursely. While Eva was absent her father put on his "considering cap," and by the time the reunited lovers entered the room he had arrived at a pretty accurate solution of the mystery. "Eva has convinced me that I have treated you unjustly, Fred," said Mr. Adamson, extending a hand, which was heartily shaken. "Now, one question: How did this envelope come into your uncle's possession?" "Oh!" laughed Fred, "when I sent it off it contained somthing exceptionally warm. A fitting reply to a letter. in which my precious uncle offered me £100 for a peep at your plans." "And this letter of your uncle's? Did you show it to anyone?"

"Only to Frank." "Only to Frank!" echoed old Adamson, bitterly. "And at the risk of mak. ing a fool of myself a second time, I'll have a shot at guessing what Frank did. He knew you were writing that something exceptionally warm, and he knew that 'something' would put your uncle in a fit mood to fall in with a plot of his own. He wrote accepting the offer himself, and subsequently stole the plans, These, when duly copied, were placed in the envelope of your letter and returned to me. This, your artful cousin imagined, would effectually part Eva and you. And, by Jove! but for Eva's partiality for reading plots in postmarks, it would have succeeded.
