HAT do you think, mother dear? A strange man is building a house and having a lot of breaking done on the quarter section I've been hoping no one would touch before I'm old enough to homerised it myself," cried Will Strong, a bright-faced, aturdy lad of 14, byrsting into the room where his mother ant sewing. "I was mad when I saw what was going on and walked right no the man ready to tell him what thought of him, jumping my claim that way, but he spoke so pleasantly that I couldn't say a word. It's too bad, though isn't it?"

Mrs. Strong smoothed back the sunmy curls from her boy's brow as he sat on the floor beside her low chair. "Never mind, dearie," she said,

"something just as good may be had when you are old enough to take up land. That is quite a while yet.

Without a word the boy turned and ran home at the top of his speed, burst In upon his mother, threw his arms about her and gasped:

"Come mother! I've found father! Here's your cape-don't stop for a hat -come and see him," and almost carrving her, he hurried his mother along the path over which he had just flown telling her, as they went, what had oc curred. They found Harney alone and explained the situation to him.

"Well. ma'am, I reckon it is your husband," he said. "He don't know me an' it cuts me to the heart; he's always seemed to think such a lot of ne an' to depend on me. I didn't know jest what to say to him, so I coaxed him to lay down, an' I come out to look for Will, hopin he'd know what to do. Will you step in an' see him. ma'am?" -

Mrs. Strong, with shining eyes and flushed cheeks, opened the door.

"Marian, my wife!" they heard, in oyful tone, and a low murmur for what seemed to Will an age, then his mother, wiping away happy tears, called him in. After a little he came out ud looked for Harney, whom he found sitting dejectedly on a pile of lumber.

"It is my father, Harney. He and everywhere. Refuse all substitutes. where you found him and all about it. He don't remember the least thing!".

Harney told them how, ten years before he and his father had found an insensible man in a lonely spot not far from their home in the Tennessee mountains, his only clothing a dirty and ragged coat and a pair of trousers. There was nothing whatever to tell who he was or from whence he came When he came to seemingly not much Wythe Boyce, and this they called him.

Marian Strong laid down her work and gazed across the dimpling water. Her soft brown eyes were very sad, as she thought of just such another lovely October afternoon, ten years before when in their pretty New Jersey home, her husband had kissed her and her boy good-by and started on one of his trips through the South for a New York firm. A letter, posted at Knoxville, Tenn., was the last heard of from him, and all efforts to trace him were fruitless; but his wife would not give up, even after the firm had reinctantly abandoned the search, until her means were quite exhausted. The and son clinging to him. At the turn a cousin living in St. Paul persuaded of the road they looked back and her to go out there, where she secured a position as teacher in the public

One summer, several years later, she and her boy spent her vacation with ber cousin's family, camping on the shore of the lake where we find her. She fell in love with the spot and lookod forward with dread to the time when she must return to town. Her cousin's husband suggested that, as no one seemed to be claiming the land, she should take it as a homestead.

"I would only too gladly, if I had money enough to build ever so small a house and to live on for a while. I could surely get a school near here," and, luckily, the way was opened next day, when she learned that a distant relative had left her $2,000. Taking immediate steps to secure the land, she and Will were settled in their new home before winter, and she had no simoulty in securing the district school not a very large one which she had

Though rather a silent man, Mr. Boyce seemed to enjoy the lad's coming and flow of talk, and looked wistfully after himwhen he left.

Of medium height and spars frame, Mr. Boyce was probably 10, though at f at aight one would have thought-him much older, his light brown hair was so thickly strewn with gray. His blue eyes had a dreamy, faraway look and 4 suile lit up his face. His companion, Harney Jones, a big, good-natured, rellow-haired follow of 25 or thereabout was devoted to him, taking upon himself all the roughest and heaviest work. The two had taken adfoining tracts as homesteads, building their two-roomed house on the dividing line so that, without being separated, esali lived on dis gwn land.

One Maturday afternoon, Will was money, Harney proposed that they should go North and get some land of their own, "and here we are," he concluded, wiping his moist brow on his sleeve. "I reckon you uns don't want me any longer," starting to go out.

"Indeed we do, dear Mr. Jones," declared Mrs. Strong, clasping one of the blushing giant's hands in both of hers, while her husband pressed the other. "But for you my husband might never have been restored to us and we cannot spare such a friend. Henry has not seen our home yet, and will have to get acquainted with his family all over again. Won't you come to supper and help him to de so?"

"Thank you, ma'am," with delicate thoughtfulness; "I won't so this evening, if you'll excuse me, but will he mighty glad to come some other time," and with a brave smile he watched the man who had so long been his close companion, going away with wife waved their hands and he responded When they were quite out of sight he sighed heavily and turned away,
