Splendid Grant Victory!

Republican Majority 1500!

Gain of 3000!

A Republican Governor, a Republican Legislature, and a U. S. Senator Assured.

CONCORD, March 12, 1872.—The eventful political contest which has attracted the attention of the country during the first few weeks is now over, and all the visions of a democratic triumph have vanished into the thinnest kind of thin air.

The dominant party of the nation is sustained. Grant and his administration emphatically vindicated, and the republicans everywhere have reason to rejoice.

That the result of the contest has been a most unmistakable party victory there is not the slightest doubt, and although the State is very evenly divided in the matter of republican and democratic believers, there is no use in denying the fact that when a full vote is brought out the triumphant party of to-day as a tribe in the majority.

EVERYBODY ASTONISHED.

The magnitude of this victory, as slight as it is, has astonished everybody, and none more than the republicans themselves, for there were very few who believe until this afternoon the election would be decided by the vote of the people.

Both parties went to the polls with alternate apprehensions of defeat and victory, and not until late in the day did either one dare count the other with weakness or insignificance.

Unconstitutionality of Local Option.

OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
ATTORNEY-GEN.'S OFFICE, Mar. 6, '72.—
To the Senate.—The resolution of the Senate requesting me to examine Senate Bill, No. 239, entitled "A further supplement to an act entitled 'An act concerning innkeepers,'" and to advise the Senate whether, in my opinion, the provisions of the bill are or are not constitutional, was received by me on the evening of Friday, the 1st instant. But having before received unofficial information of it, I have examined and considered the question.

I should have made my reply during Monday, the 4th instant, had I not received communication from the State Temperance Alliance, asking an interview to day at Jersey City, but which from my engagement here I was obliged to request to be had here. I have not been waited upon by any one on behalf of the Alliance, and will therefore proceed to give to the Senate my opinion upon the bill submitted to me.

The bill after providing for elections every year in every town, city, borough and township in the State, at which the voters of the locality are to determine by vote whether licenses shall be granted to sell certain liquors in the town, &c., enacts that in any town, &c., the voters of which have determined that licenses shall not be granted, it shall not be lawful to sell such liquors, and that any person so offending shall be guilty of misdemeanor and fined from $50 to $100, and not less than $100 for any subsequent offense.

It will be observed that the offense defined by this act cannot be committed unless the voters of the town have determined that licenses shall not be granted.

Wherever and whenever the validity of a statute which made an act of the citizen an offense only on condition that the people of the locality or of the State should have voted that it was their will that the act should or should not be licensed to be done, has been called in question, it has been held unconstitutional.

It has been so held in Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Delaware, and Rhode Island.

The ground upon which its unconstitutionality has been put in these States is that an offense cannot be created by any statute which is to take effect according to the will of any other body or individual or individuals than the body vested with the power of making laws. Statutes may take effect according to any condition which the Legislature may prescribe, unless that condition is the will of some other body or individual or persons. I speak not of grants or entries made in the form of statutes. The reason of this is that human laws in their nature must be enacted by human will. Wherefore, as in this State, by the constitution it is declared that all legislative power shall be vested in the Senate and General Assembly, no part of it is vested elsewhere. No bill can become a law unless it is enacted by the will of the Senate and General Assembly. If the bill declares that the will of any mass of individuals shall be of force equal to the will of the Legislature, and be as its will is—law—it is plain that the Legislature thereby proposed to subject its will to the will of this mass of individuals. It is true the Legislature means that its will in such case shall be the same as the will of the individuals; but as it does not know what the will of the individuals shall be, it is plain it does not know, when it gives the sanction of its legislative power to the bill, what its own will is, or what its own will will be.

It gives up its own will; or, having no will at all; gives to another the power to declare its will, and as the whole function of making a law, is declaring what the will of the legislature is it is plain it gives away its legislative power.

It is admitted on all hands that legislative power cannot be delegated, though some judges have thought it was in a measure delegate when a city was incorporated. But charters of incorporation to cities have always been considered grants, and in England were granted by the Crown.

As the Crown was not the Legislature, it is plain that the incorporation of a city was never considered at the common law, as an act of Legislature. Our Legislature grants these charters in the form of laws, not because the grant is an exercise of legislative power; but, the State Legislatures, unlike the national legislature, having all power not given to other departments of the State government, or reserved to the people, exercise all their powers whether legislative or not, by means of acts, resolves and laws. The State grants its lands by law, but that is no more than exercise of legislative power than the grant by a farmer of his lands is an exercise of the legislative power by him.

Because such statutes are not made in the exercise of legislative power, it is that laws creating cities, counties, &c., and a multitude of other law, though submitted to the people, are perfectly valid.

The Legislature in passing such laws does declare its legislative will, but it is consent as the representative of the sovereignty of the people to make a grant of the power of local government, in its nature an exercise of legislative power.

The Crown, though not the Legislature, could always grant this; and all the American colonies were created corporations, by the Crown's charter alone.

Though powers of local government are granted, legislative power is not assigned. The acts and resolves of a city are not laws—they are by-laws which are open to the supervision of the courts, and can be declared void for unreasonableness, but any act or resolve or by-law of any corporation which is erected for local government may.

For this reason our own Supreme Court, though citing without question the Pennsylvania case, which declared a case like this void, has held the voters may always determine whether a charter, or any amendment to it, or any power of government, or local regulation shall be accepted or be in force. It is a grant and so may be submitted to the people for their acceptance.

It gives no power to make laws, and so far it may be submitted to the people to accept or reject.

So, if this law gave power to the towns and cities to regulate the liquor traffic and submitted to the people, whether they should accept this power or not, it would be a perfectly valid law.

It would be no transfer of legislative power; for laws could not be made under it. Whatever act, resolution or ordinance was framed under such a law so submitted to the people, and so accepted, would not be a law, for it could be declared utterly void by the courts, if unreasonable.

None of the decisions denying the constitutionality of laws like this, deny the validity of a statute which is really a grant of land, or a grant of franchise, or a grant of power of local government, including the power to provide for education, though it is submitted to the granted for acceptance, whether that grant be an individual or many individuals, the people by a hamlet, school district, town, city or county. Indeed, all of the decisions denying the validity of laws like this affirm the perfect constitutionality of the others.

The bill in question is without doubt founded upon a doctrine that was suggested in the New York school cases by one or two of the judges—that it is only a law that is to operate over the whole State, and is submitted to the people of the whole State, that is unconstitutional.

And as the bill has a local operation and is to go into effect by virtue of votes in each town, city, &c., it is supposed it is not obnoxious to the same objection that a law general in its operation would be.

But the Pennsylvania law was a local operation law as this is; yet that did not save it from being declared unconstitutional.

In truth the doctrine was merely suggested by New York, and has never been the basis on which the Court has acted in declaring laws valid which were submitted to the people. The true ground upon which the decisions declaring laws submitted to the people valid were made was that taken by our Supreme Court in the case of the Paterson charter—that the laws were grants, and though the grant was made in and by the form of law, it could properly be submitted to the people for acceptance; and that all powers of government given by such laws were not powers to make laws, but by-laws. The latter we know are subject to the supervision of the Courts, the former must be obeyed by the Courts.

The proposed law is beyond all doubt without warrant in, and plainly interdicted by the Constitution of the State.

ROBERT GILCHRIST,
Attorney General.
