How Mamma Plays. ruse the sweetest thing that the children do is to play with mamma a playibetoo; And "Baby is Lost," they think is the best, For mamma plays that with a merry rest.

"My baby lost!" up and down mamina goes. A peering about and following her nose; Inside the papers and under the books. And all in between the covers she looks, "Baby! baby!" calling, But though in her way is pape's tall hat, She never once thinks to look under that. The listens, she ktops, she hears the wee laugh;
And around she files the faster by half.

"Why, where can he be?" and the opens the clock,
She tumbles het heiset; the sakkee pape's wock,

"Baby, beby!", calling.

While the children all smile at pape's tail hat,
Though none of them go and look under that.

A sweet cocalis. Mamma darts everywhere, the feels in her pockets to see if he's there; In svery vase on the mentle shelf.

But eserches sharp for the little off,

"Baby! baby" calling.

Another coo comes from pape's fall hat.

Yet none of them sitr an inch toward that. Somewhere he certainly must be, she knows, So up to the china cup-loard she goes; The covers she lifts from the sugar bowls,

She moves the dishes, but haby is not In the croam-pitcher or in the teapot, And abe wrings her hands and stamps on the floor, And abe wrings her hands and stamps on the floor, Sho shakes the rugs and sho opens the door, "Baby! baby!" calling.

They stand with their backs to papa's tall hat, Though the sweetest of murmurs color from that.

The children join in the furny duriess.
Till mamma, all audden, with quick caress,
Makes a pounce right down on the tall black hat,
And brings out the faby freou under that,

"Baby ! baby, calling.
And this is the end of the little play,
The children would like to try every day.

If I were in the President's place I do not hay that I would not hay conculiated the South. If I had it in my power, as Chief Excentive of the nation, I would conciliate every honest and law-abiding citizen of the South with every honorable means of conciliation in my power, and, on the other hand, I would use that same executive power to follow after and punch the murderer of an inoffensive citizen to the fullest extent of the law. What I to the fullest extent of the law. What I object to is that life, property, liberty, are not safe to-day in the South, and that to be sold by murder is, in that section, unavenged and unpunished.
