MUSIC'S RE-CREATION

Something more than mere tone reproduction.

Artificial tone reproduction is wonderful indeed; but it is not musical. A beautiful voice that is marred by mechanical timbre in its reproduction, is no longer beautiful. It no longer satisfies the music lover, however great may be the artist.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1916

The following resolutions were adopted at the great Local Option Mass Meeting in Trenton, held in the Billy Sunday Tabernacle on Wednesday, February 2nd:

WHEREAS, the brewery and the saloon, entrenched in politics and the boss system, have for years prevented the enactment of a Local Option law in New Jersey; be it

RESOLVED, that we, representatives of the people from all sections of the State, in mass meeting assembled at Trenton, February 2nd, 1916, declare that we are weary and disgusted with this long continued subversion of the saloon and the brewery, and we demand that they be removed from the saloon and the brewery, and that they be placed under the control of the people, and that the rights of the people to govern their own affairs.

In 46 of our 48 States the voters have in some form the right of majority rule on the license question, and we demand that the people of New Jersey be also given the right to destroy this social and political blight, this business parasite, this breeder of crime, wrecker of homes and debaucher of virtue.

To that end we demand that Senate Bill No. 20, known as the Gamut Local Option Bill, be enacted into law.

Last year, a member of the County Board of Freeholders, prompted by an idea of economy, had a resolution passed, calling for bids for doing all the County advertising. The two lowest bidders were awarded the contract—at a figure that made regular publishers gasp—for it did not pay for setting the type. We venture to say that not one of our readers ever saw one of those advertisements. This year a change was proposed, and an attorney told them (what they ought to have known) that all of last year's advertising might have to be declared illegal, because the State law fixes a price which "shall" be paid for all such business, and the Freeholders had paid less than one-fourth of said legal charge. It was then decided to give this year's advertising to two papers, without asking for cut rates; and, of course, both papers chosen are in Atlantic City. Again, but few people throughout the county will see the advertisements, which are intended for all the people, and should have been divided. We have poor opinion of men who will cheapen their product to obtain what will eventually work to their hurt.

Much can be said in favor of the proposed semi-centennial celebration in Hammoncton. But before anything definite is done at the meeting next Friday night, it might be well to consider the cost; also as to whether there is not a greater need for the money in other directions. One of our best citizens proposes that the fifteen hundred dollars, or more, might be a starter for a local hospital. As for ourselves, we believe a better fire apparatus, or a new building to house what we now have, would be of lasting value. Every town around is finding a combination apparatus a thing-of-necessity, while we seem content to use the old-fashioned hand-drawn variety. Let's get out a booklet, but save what we can for something of permanent value.

We are told on good authority that several of our citizens went to a certain hotel in town on Sunday afternoon, and when they left, at ten o'clock, they were all but paralyzed drunk. If one hotel is allowed to sell on Sunday, why not all? There are several other joints in town, they say, doing business without a license. Respectfully referred to County Prosecutor Moore.

FRY'S Pasteurized Milk

An Inspector from the State Board of Health visited Fry's Dairy on January 14th, and made official tests for bacteria. Here is a copy of his report:

No.	From	Bacteria per cc
359	Raw Milk	550,000
360	Pasteurized	6,000
361	Pasteurized	9,000
362	Pasteurized	4,000
363	Cooler	5,000
364	Cooler	5,000
365	Cooler	7,000
366	Bottle	9,000
367	Bottle	6,000
368	Total Solids, 12.36 per cent.
	Fat, 4.10 per cent.

This is an unusually favorable report, and the total of bacteria removed shows that the pasteurized milk is the only milk safe to use. What do you know about the milk you are buying?

The street lamps looked pretty, Wednesday night,—each with a fringe of icicles around the shade,—the light making them like crystal pendants. We doubt whether Hammoncton was ever prettier,—every branch, twig, vine, spear of grass, and wire, was covered with ice, and with the sun shining through and glistening, made every-day homely things looking lovely.

As yet, we have made very little advance in the price of job printing; but if another notice is received from our paper houses, we shall have to make an increase to save ourselves. During the last six months, three advances have been made, including the removal of discounts from prices on envelopes. The wholesale houses, in explaining the "whys" and "wherefores," as follows:—casing, was 6 1/2 c, now 23 c; alum, raised from 1-4 to 3 cts.; rosin, from $3.75 per bbl to $6.50; bleached sulphate, $2.65 per cwt, to $4.50; white satin, 5 cts. to 9 cts.; aniline colors; 40c per lb. to $20; bleach, 1 1/4 cts. to 7 cts.

Some winter, this week. Wednesday, rain fell all day, changing to sleet and hail towards night, then to snow, leaving three inches of covering on the ground by daylight, and still increasing. Temperature lowered considerably, to twenty-seven on Thursday morning. Everything was coated with ice, and icicles hung from everything possible. The sun shone brightly, but the ice clung fast all day. Friday morning's temperature was twelve above, sun shining, everything a-glitter.

The interest and enthusiasm in the lectures held during Farmers' Week, 1916, is appreciated, and therefore a similar plan is in formation for this year. Farmers' week will begin Monday night, February 7th. Lectures upon the problems of farming will be given by members of the United States Department of Agriculture, State Experiment Station, and County Vocational School. The program is published in another column.

"Godfrey's Cuts," from Atlanta City, came up, on Thursday night for a ball-rolling match with the Hammoncton team, in the Rod and Gun Club bowling alley. Totals, Hammoncton, 4005; Colts, 3915. High game, Slack, 213; high five games, Slack, 888; count, three out of five.

The Board of Trade met on Tuesday evening, in Civic Club Hall, with a fair attendance. Several propositions and inquiries were received, and turned over to committees to dispose of. Stones For Soldiers' Graves.
Congressman Bacharach wishes to announce through the columns of this paper that he is in position to obtain through the War Department, headstones for soldiers' graves that are without suitable markers. The headstones are furnished free of cost, and shipped freight prepaid to the nearest railroad station. The only cost is that of transporting the stones from the railroad station and erecting the same.

They are furnished for the unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors and marines who served in the army or navy of the United States during any war or insurrection (including the Revolution) whether regular or volunteer, and whether they died in the service or since their muster out or discharge therefrom. Anyone who may be interested in this announcement should communicate with Mr. Bacharach, the Congressman has taken the matter up with the commanders of the G. A. R. Posts and Spanish Second Division throughout the Second District, asking their co-operation in locating the graves of any soldiers that are at present unmarked.

The stones furnished by the Government are 30 inches long, 12 inches wide, and 4 inches thick. Each stone is inscribed with the name, rank (if above private), company, and State regiment or other organization, to which the deceased soldier belonged, cut in relief within a sunken shield.

is one that is largely being solved by machinery. In the hotels and large restaurants, automatic silver burnishing machines and silver cleaning pans are used exclusively, with an enormous reduction and saving in labor and time. And in order to allow the housewives the better results and greater pleasure enjoyed by the hotels, similar types of these machines and pans have been made for their especial use. The burnishing machine consists of a revolving barrel filled with the finest kind of

The inside as well as the outside of every piece of silver is made wonderfully shining—all the crevices in the engravings and finely chased designs, between the tines of forks, coffee spoons—every bit of tarnish is removed without scratching or marring in any way the silver surface. This pan is made of an electropositive metal, soldered to the

I AM—or, rather, was—jockey. There! now: have lost prestige, the eyes of the many thousands of people w-

On the other hand, I must candidly confess that I could find more than enough material to fill a book disclosing the dark side of the turf. The public knows all about that phase of turf-life, however, and unfortunately the same cannot be said of the public in general, and therefore one-sided selection cannot discern the difference, so far as respectability is concerned, between the jockey and the harper.

But enough of this. Everybody has heard of Tom Kenyon, the once-famous jockey, but everybody has not heard a certain little story about that.

Early one evening, many years ago, Kenyon was informed that Lord Glamour wished to have a word with him in private. Tom had just retired to rest, for he was in strict training

"I'm sorry to see you are not in the best of health," said Lord Clannmore; "but I came to see you on a matter of business."

In an instant Tom was all attention.

"Tom, I think I can trust you. I know my father trusted you with an important secret."

Tom nodded.

"I will remember that I sold my father's medals and every one of his cherished horses when I came into the estate."

"By my word, my lord, that is why I will sell Eric Marsden now."

"By the by, how do you get on with honorable member from West Kentleigh?"

"I will say, my lord—almost as well as with the late Lord Clannmore."

"I am glad, but, of course, I excited as much. But I must go on with confusion—for such it is. Do you wish to see me?"

You generally do not credit to your friend, Tom, but, of course, I cannot forget your cha—your offer, I mean.”

“I beg your pardon, my lord—”

“The sum of £500,000 must raise at least £600,000. I can get a final mortgage of £60,000 on the estate, and if I lose it the mortgage will foreclose, and I am ruined. I have explained this to him, Tom, because you have a right to know all the facts. But now, if you can help me to win the £500,000, you can help me to save the estate from what you—to—why, what’s the matter?”

Kenyon had fainted. He had heard such yarns before, and the condition was always a suggestion to him of a hoax and deliberate loss of money, so that the pleader might re-assert his fortune by foul means. The thought that the son of his old master—the old Lord Glammore, the soul of integrity—could stoop to such a scheme was too much for the jockey. In over suddenly, and at the starting-point of the race, Alpha felt assured that the sprinter would make a good bid for victory.

But Alpha did make a good bid for victory. Slowly, but surely, Alpha and Beta were really the only two horses left in the race. The vast crowd cheered lustily for Beta. A hundred yards from a winning post the pair ran neck and neck, but Beta, that bar at the end of his nose, he would win.

Then, and not till then, was Tom Torture sure that Indefinite species would not have any experiences when he was in a position to make a bid for victory in opposite directions. If Alpha did not, no one would be surprised.

Indefinitely anybody but the "bookies" would have been surprised. The thousands of spectators had backed Beta on his mount. Above all, Lord Clarence would be saved from ruin and disgrace—and had not he himself

"congratulate you, old man," said Jockey who rode him. "I thought 'hould have beaten you (in time), you know, when the matter?"

"I took over well pleased at your offer," said the matter?

"I thought congratulations!" - exclaimed Sir Eric Marples, his face lit up with a smile. "I never rode in your life. Tom - never."

And then, to add to Tom's discomfort, Lord Clarence, the ruined Lord - looked in sight. The winning feeling split at least, and he decided to avoid him, but Lord Clarence was not the man to be avoided.

"Tom," excitedly whispered the jockey, "in his unwilling ear, you have saved me."

The jockey started.

"I put $50,000 on Alpha at twenty-five," continued Lord Clarence, "and I'll give you $50,000. I shall not forget you, Tom."

Kenyon could scarcely hold his ears. Yet the excited

A RISING LAWYER.

In 1874, Luther Laflin Mills, of Chicago, the eloquent State's attorney, was sitting in a cafe, when a man entered and delivered the lawyer a morning paper. There was nothing unusual in this, because the same boy had performed the same service for months, in sunshine, sleet or shower.

On this particular occasion the boy doctored about the room, looking at the law books and the wilderness of papers. Then he turned abruptly toward the lawyer and said: "I would like to be a lawyer." Mills questioned him, and found him intelligent, earnest and plucky. "He took him in—five boy-read, attended to his needs, and the errand boy went to the lecture in the law school, and attended himself invaluable.

At the expiration of two years he

"What hours would be required of me?" he asked, when the nature of the work had been explained to him.

"From eight until six."

"How long for dinner?"

"An hour."

"In some places they allow an hour and a quarter."

"We allow but an hour."

"Is a fellow docked if he is a little late?"

"He is not expected to be late."

"Oh, I presumed not; but then he is late. How about summer vacation?"

"We allow two weeks with full salary."

"I suppose you never make it?"

"We do not."

"Do the clerks ever have to work over the regular hours?"

"Sometimes—during the busy season."

that you would not suit us at all. Good-bye, sir!"

When the applicant was dismissed, however, to his surprise, and, let us say, to his profit in the future.

TOOK HIM LITERALLY.

As the steamer was leaving the harbor of Athens a well-dressed English passenger approached the captain and, pointing to the distant hills, inquired:

"What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?"

"That is snow, madam," replied the captain.

"Well," remarked the lady, "I thought so, myself, but a gentleman I now told me it was ice-cream."

of human beings once made the stage of the United States. The subjects in question are known as King Tze Hsueh's lairy family and comprise a group of the most extraordinary individuals that have ever been shown among civilized folk.

The two principals are a mother and son. Both are well-grown, thoroughly developed and of pleasant aspect, the former having exceptionally beautiful eyes.

So far these Burmese—for they hail from Mandalay—are very ordinary persons, but in one respect they are different from the average Burmese. They are covered with tattoos, and over a foot long, from head to toe. This hirsute appendage not only covers their bodies and limbs, but also their faces, and their hair, chin and forehead, springing from the creases of their eyes, and sprouts from the orifice of their very ears.

NO NEED FOR "SPECIALS."

"There are still some people out there who think, and fairly badly at that, with regard to a daily newspaper. Such an individual was discovered the other day on the back of a cabinet of conversation in the corner of the old fellow found that there were some which had named their history as still fresh news to him.

"My good man," he said, in shocked amazement, "this is lamentable. Why do you not subscribe to some daily or weekly newspaper, and thus keep yourself in touch with what is going on?"

"We'd," said the old man, "I have no thinkin' of doing summat of that sort, if, so soon, when my father died, ten years ago, I had a pile of newspapers four foot high and I ain't seen through them yet!"

IT was a dull morning in the ten-cent store, and Jenny had nothing to do. She stood gazing drearily out of the win-

"Mary Dix! How I hate her!" Jenny thought. Her pleasant look became a scowl. Just in front of the window the two young people had paused for a moment's chat. The girl, with her hair waving like the wind, wore a dress of white and blue, and a long white flower-bedecked sash. Her companion wore a blue and white striped jacket, and a blue and white striped skirt. They were both looking at the flowers and a fresh showing of ten-cent tokens. Jenny drew back, but not so far as to escape their notice. "David's strong, earnest young face was full of light, which seemed like a reflection of Mary Dix's brightness. And yet she was not pretty. But she was good-looking. Her dark brown coat was warm but plain; her brown velvet hat hid most of her simply arranged hair, she wore no powder, jewelry or lace, and yet Jenny knew that she was worth more than the pink in the office of the hardware firm up the street. "And Aunt Mary only pays me $5," mourned Jenny.

"She couldn't make up her mind," teased Jenny.

"Then it was your business to help her. I wouldn't had her gone out that night without me, and she'd tell him she's got money. And she's Dave Power's grandmother." Jenny turned pale and Mrs. Hess eyed her enjoyably. "She'll go in to see him before she goes to bed, and she'll tell him how you acted. Now, see here, Jenny," said Mrs. Hess growl terribly ominous. "you got to brace up right away straight or I'll send you home. You got to be a lady and a help to me, but when it comes to interfering with my trade it's got to stop."

Jenny went back to her desk and Jennie nodded with her head on her hands, and she thought, "I'll go home. For stopmother did not want her. She would rather die than go home. She would want to die any way if she lost Dave Power. And she

A week later, Mrs. Hess threw Jenny a note from the morning's mail. Looks like an invitation. "It is," cried Jenny, opening it. "It's from the Dixie."

"Well, there!" said Mrs. Hess, "mulling." That pleased me. Mary's a nice girl, with a nice family and money. I'm proud to have her notice me. I'll tell that to the boys."

"Oh, I must," breathed Jenny. "You must," said Mrs. Hess, steady. "If you don't go they'll be of no use, and they're good customers for mine."

So Jenny went. Mrs. Hess bought a new dress for her—a flimsy white

After the party Dave Power walked home with Jenny. They walked down the street, and the moon was full, for there was moonlight. Mrs. Hess sat up in bed to hear all the news, and what had happened. "Dave's a good boy," she said. "You couldn't do better. I guess you're pretty happy girl to-night, Jenny." "I am," said Jenny. "I am very happy," said Jenny with a sigh of deep content. _____

The story of these remarkable people is peculiar. They were originally owned by King Tiao Bau, who kept them in a cage in his palace, and having such carillous about him would bring him good fortune. On the overthrow of the deposed tyrant, the hilly family escaped to the woods and hid themselves in the heart of the forest, on what ruins they could gather, until discovered by Captain Piper, who freed them in almost complete isolation and comforted them and subsequently made arrangements for a voluntary European tour.
