WHILE some of our competitors are working all sorts of schemes to start goods from counter and shelf, we prefer to offer our goods to the trade, and sell them on their merits; believing that by so doing better service can be rendered by the dealer, and far greater satisfaction realized by the purchaser than can possibly be the case on the principle of getting something for nothing.

Foresight vs. Hindsight.

46.—Yankee Doodle.

One year ago
We struck the blow
For Grover and Free-Trade;
With loud acclaim,
With streets adame,
With marching and parades,
"Grover, Grover," was our cry,
"Four years more of Grover,
With the Free-Trade flag on high,
Then we'll be in clover."

We little thought
The fight we fought
And won,—defensive Grover!
Would bring, instead,
But paper's bread
To men who cried for Grover.
"Grover, Grover," was our cry,
"Four years more of Grover,
With the Free-Trade flag on high,
The soup-house is the clover."

They told us then
We workingmen
Were robbed by laws unfeeling;
No man to-day
Has that to say,
"The workingmen are stealing,—
Stealing rides from town to town,
Thinking still of Grover,
Every freight is loaded down,
But none can find the clover."

They told us, too,
How well they knew
'Twas for our great promotion,
That goods should be
Admitted free
From lands beyond the ocean.
A million hungry men; since then,
Have thought the whole thing over,
They'll have their say another day
And 'twill be "good bye Grover."

Considerable amusement was afforded the citizens of Woodbury living on Broad Street, on Saturday morning, by the appearance on that thoroughfare of two men, sitting in a flat-bottomed boat, to which was attached a horse, the craft sliding gracefully along on the river of mud with which the street is filled. One of the men was in the bow of the boat, driving the horse, while the other was sitting in the stern, holding aloft a rudely-made banner or framework, with the inscription, "New Trolley Line." The sight caused considerable merriment among the citizens, affording, as it did, a double hit at the vexed trolley question and the bad condition of the city's main thoroughfare.

Farmers in Vermont will disastrously feel the effect of the Wilson tariff. The average rate of wages paid to farm hands in that State is 24 per cent. more than the rate paid in Canada, and, therefore, the Canadians will be able to sell their farm stuff in the Vermonters' markets at 24 per cent. less price than Americans can. This will be especially true of milk, eggs, cabbages, cider, peas, straw, hams, lard, bacon, pork, mutton, beef, apples, and wool—all of which are to be on the free list.

A year or so ago, Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, the distinguished writer, of Massachusetts, prophesied that in two years Grover Cleveland would be the most unpopular man in the United States. He was scoffed at as a false prophet then, but it now looks very much as if he was inspired when he made the prediction.

A prominent authority on hygienics in a recent article remarks that good cooking and warm clothing are essential to health. But the trouble is to get something to cook and to warm. Under Democratic rule receipts for food and clothing are a great deal less important than the articles themselves.

When all life's signs are still,
And all life's signs are still,
When rest is quiet as a sea at last,
What matters go on?

What matters go on?
Calm hands are folded over a quiet breast,
The weary head is pillowed in sweet rest,
And sorrow comes to rest.

What matters go on?
The narrow grave is not a north wind,
The deathless soul is not a north wind,
And men forget our name.

Why, then, depend, my friend?
The one thou lovest has but found at last
Sweet peace and calm and rest when toll
Is past,
And death is not the end.

A Double Valentine

SCHOOL was over and the scholars dismissed. All save two "worst boys," who "keeping in" was depriving the teacher of half an hour of her own precious time.

She sat at her desk, clasping her hands, and looking at the clock. The weather was close and sultry, and she had "at all day in the stove-chested room, not daring to open the doors and windows lest the children should take cold."

"These latter—girls as well as boys—had shown themselves unusually restless, inattentive and provoking, with an amount of giggling and whispering going on which had sorely tried the nerves and temper of the usually patient teacher."

As she now sat, resting her aching temples in her hands, she almost concluded that it would be better to give up her situation at the end of this first session, and seek some less wearying life less "gentled" means of support. And she would be glad to get away from Lynnville.

At first she had liked it, and fancied that the people liked her, but since the new minister, the Reverend Frank Deane, had begun to show her some little kind attention when they came to meet at the various church societies, seeing societies and other similar entertainments, she had begun to feel that she was not so much appreciated as she had at first supposed.

It had even come to her ears that she was generally accused of "getting into the cap" for the minister, and that Miss Peckish Perkins, who, when Mr. Deane was suffering from a cold, had sent him a pair of embroidered slippers and no end of cake and gingerbread, and "ing," had publicly declared her sympathy with "that Kate Morrison was a silly, designing minx," while Patty Merriman had pronounced it "downright impudent" to "show her face to her husband."

And so poor Kate, in mingled pride and mortification, had since felt herself obliged, in self-defense, to "retaliate" with a coldness and reserve which had evidently put an end to his attentions.

And the faint, sweet dream of a dawning happiness, which had for a brief moment cheered her lonely life, had vanished, leaving only a shadow behind.

She was thinking of these things now, as she sat at her desk, until thought became a torture, and to escape from it she arose and left the school-room, and stood for awhile resting in the shade of the big elm tree which grew behind the house.

The two boys looked after her, and then moved cautiously toward each other and commenced whispering and grinning.

"Say, Dick, did you give that Valentine to Liz Miller?"

"Yes, he did. And she was so pleased she jumped out of her seat and kissed me. Guess that little Smith won't please a bit. She tore up her Valentine, and I loved her to rags. Guess she'll never love me again."

"What you think? Tom Ned didn't send them Valentines to Mamie and Sally. He was sort of 'frail.' Here they are in his desk. Ain't they stunning? He, he!"

"Wonder if she'll get a Valentine?"

"Dunno. Heard brother Ben say she minister was so sorry on her. Say—his flushed face became suddenly radiant—'You've sent her one of those Valentines from him!'

"An' other one to my—from her?"

"They obbed in a flash. But there was no time for talking in the morning. So while Dick hastily scribbled a note to the minister, and then, after a glance at the clock, he hurried to the school-room."

"The two Valentines were hastily shuffled into the envelope, and Dick, snatching out of the front door, met Lem as he reached the door."

"Say, Lem, please just leave this here letter at the minister's for the teacher. Don't want to go down there just to carry it."

"All right," Lem answered, as he dropped the letter into his coat pocket. And as he rode off he called back: "You better get home soon or you can't go to school."

The last words reached the teacher's ear where she stood under the elm, and she turned to re-enter the school-room. Dick had just time to regain his seat, leaving the second letter on her desk as he skipped past, for there was no time to place it inside, where she would have found it before leaving school.

Unfortunately he missed his aim and the envelope fell to the floor behind the teacher's seat, where it attracted her attention as she entered.

She picked it up, read the address, and holding it up said quietly: "This letter? It is addressed to the minister, Mr. Deane."

A quick glance of dismay was exchanged between the two. They had given Lem the wrong letter.

Josh answered, boldly: "No."

She placed the missive on her desk. No doubt it had been entrusted to one of the children, who had forgotten it, and she would see that it reached Mr. Deane that evening.

Then she called the two boys before her. "I hope that you know your lesson now," she said, "and will be able to recite promptly. Dick, I will begin with you. What surmounted at Yorktown, in Virginia?"

"General Washington," responded Dick, boldly.

The teacher's smooth brow contracted, but she made no comment, and gave him one more chance.

"To whom was the surrender made?"

"There was a momentary puzzled consideration, and then came the triumphant reply: "Napoleon Bonaparte!"

Miss Kate closed the book and turned to her other pupil.

"Timothy, what are the three largest cities in the United States?"

"New York, London and—Brazil!"

Again the book was closed; but before a word could be spoken the eyes of both teacher and pupils were turned toward the open door.

He had stopped at the gate, and a good-looking young man, in clerical dress, was walking briskly toward the school house.

Miss Kate arose and went slowly to learn his errand at the door, for she had no time to spare to enter. It was only when she saw the big drops of rain pattering upon his shoulders that she said, reluctantly:

"Will you come in, Mr. Deane, out of the rain?"

He stepped within and drew a letter from his breast pocket.

"I had no intention of intruding," he said, pleasantly, "but merely desired to deliver this letter, which was handed me a few moments since, by Lemuel Miller, whom I met on the road. There seems to have been some mistake, as it is addressed to Miss Kate Morrison."

"Strange!" Kate said. "And here is one which I just now found directed to yourself."

The two boys, unnoticed by the teacher, began sliding toward the door.

She hastily opened the letter just given her, and the minister did the same with his. As their sight was greeted by the gorgeous illuminations of hearts and roses, each glanced up, and their eyes meeting, both laughed. The laugh seemed to take away from the stiffness between them.

"I had forgotten," said the minister, "that this is St. Valentine's Day. But it seems that boys never forget the occasion."

And he looked toward the two culprits near the door.

Kate glanced at the name scribbled beneath the printed lines on the paper. He checked flushed and she said, hastily:

"Mr. Deane, is my name inscribed upon that work of art in your hand?"

"Yes. And I presume that you ask because you find my own name upon yours? You can see it, if you like. You will find the poetry worthy of the artistic design."

She took it, and read:

"If you will be my Valentine,
Our lives with happiness will join
Like June-bugs on a pumpkin vine."
—Miss Kate Morrison.

"How absurd!" said Kate, with a mixture of indignation and amusement. Mr. Deane smiled.

"I should like to know with what poetic sentiment they have credited me. I haven't read it," she answered, as she handed him the paper.

He read it over as if he loved it, and longed for this year's story to show, "Will you be my Valentine?"

"What a wretched couple!" Kate exclaimed. "Oh, those boys!"

She turned to where she supposed the two guilty ones sat, but they had vanished, though the rain was still falling in a torrent.

Her eyes filled with tears of vexation, and she—the minister—might not see them looking out on the deserted road, and the horse and gig standing beneath the shelter of the big oak tree near the gate.

But Mr. Deane had seen the tears, and he drew a step nearer, as he said, gently: "Let them have their little fun. It has done no harm, and has afforded us some amusement as well."

"They deserve to be well punished," he said. "No, don't punish them. I feel it in my heart to forgive them. He, he, he!"

"Why?"

"Why? Shall I tell you?" he came and stood by her side at the window, and drew a step nearer, as he said, gently: "Let them have their little fun. It has done no harm, and has afforded us some amusement as well."

CONVICTS ON A FARM.

ARKANSAS SOLVES THE PRISON LABOR PROBLEM.
State Prisoners Are Made to Earn Their Own Living—Five Thousand Acres Ready for Cultivation, with Sawmills and Quarries All Ready.

Cotton Farm on an Island.
An arrangement has just been entered into by the State of Arkansas with a Northern firm of capitalists by which all the State's convicts are to be transferred into a sort of Garden of Eden where the mosquitoes bite not and the alligator does not pursue the active pickaninny.

The spot chosen is a great farm situated on an island in the Mississippi River, which by reference to the map given will be seen to be of a most peculiar formation, winding about the land as it does in the shape of a horseshoe, meeting at two extremities at the mouth of the Mississippi. The water surrounding, of course, makes the place an ideal one for the confinement of convicts.

These malefactors, instead of having to submit to the local conditions in the character, recognized, especially as their work will not be of a very laborious character.

When negotiations were begun by the State of Arkansas for the lease of this island, there was considerable opposition from certain sources, but a thorough investigation of the property led the State officials to conclude that it was the only tract of land in the State that would answer all the purposes required and at the same time prove self-sustaining and profitable.

In 1863 sailing schooners first came to anchor in the waters of the State, and they thus acquired a knowledge of the superior facility afforded by a schooner for safety and comfort. It was not long before a number of these craft had confidence enough to purchase and sail a vessel of his own larger than a canoe. Gradually the Makahs have increased their business, and have now a fleet of ten or twelve schooners, varying in size from twenty-five to fifty tons each. They start out in January, as soon as the wind blows north to the vicinity of Cape Flattery, and cruise south, following the herds along the coast to the Columbia River, and returning with the seas as they slowly move southward to the Alaskan coast.

[Entered as second class matter.]
SATURDAY, FEB. 17, 1894.

Rev. Sam Jones says: "The lion and the lamb will lie down together and a little child will lead them. But until something is done for the lion you had better not turn the lamb in with him, and really I don't think that the lamb wants to go in at the present stage of the game."—It would seem from this as if the Rev. Sam had been studying the situation in New Jersey. Only here it is a wolf instead of a lion. But the lamb is "on to him." It observes the brute licking its jaws for mutton, and doesn't propose to go in at the present stage of the game.

When I see our school boys stunting their growth and drying up their brains with smoke; when I discover that their very organs are soaked in alcohol and liquor, and that the boys are baited with beer and enticed into saloons by music, games, and evil company; when I am told of their degeneracy in scholarship, so that the percentage of girls who graduate and who take honors is steadily gaining on that of boys, it seems to me that I cannot wait until the schools of my country focus their splendid light upon the problem of prevention. It is a glorious thing to go to the rescue of wicked and ruined manhood with the lifeboat of reform, but far more glorious to build a lighthouse on the sunken reef warning the unskilled voyager of his danger.—Frances Willard.

London's thirteen club, at a recent dinner, had thirteen dishes on the menu, salt cellars were emptied about the tablecloth with studied carelessness, the chairman broke a large mirror and each guest a small one, and to cap the climax, only cross-eyed waiters were employed.

Mr. Albert Favorite, of Arkansas City, Kan., wishes to give our readers the benefit of his experience with colds. He says: "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly got rid of it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I never should get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen months ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. When through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or cold since. I've recommended it to others, and all speak well of it." 50 cent bottles for sale by A. V. Cochran, druggist.

Last Sunday was a delightful day. Monday, snow, changing to rain at night. Tuesday, snow, moderately cold, thawing, muddy. Wednesday, cold, agreeable, snow at night. Thursday, rain, MUD! Friday, clear, cold, high wind.

Death, the fell destroyer, is last decimating the ranks of the G. A. R. According to the statistics, the death roll for the past year in the United States was nearly 20,000 of these men. New Jersey lost over two hundred of her old soldiers in 1893.

Wm. Bernhouse is making improvements at his lumber yard. The upright portion of the building corner Orchard Street has been raised and moved forward to the sidewalk line; the one story part was trundled down Egg Harbor Road, and makes a good barn for Wm. When the grading is completed, you'll hardly recognize that corner.

There are many things placed to the credit of newspaper men for which they are not responsible, such as using partially in mentioning visitors, giving news about some folk and leaving others out, etc. The editor simply prints the news as he can find it. Some people inform him about such items, and others do not. We are always glad to get personal and other news.

There appears to be some misunderstanding as to the purpose for which the Trustees ask lot owners in Greenmount Cemetery to contribute two dollars each. We wish to say that this money is to be used to pay a man for taking care of the cemetery during the summer months. The Trustees have money in the treasury to pay for all the improvements contemplated. The committee have no charge of the work, which will all be done by order of the Trustees.

Extract from Bulletin No. 97, New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station.—It is also shown by the results of analysis that in many cases the main difference in a brand of fertilizer is a difference in the selling price attached,—the amount and proportion of plant food constituents apparently being a less important factor to the manufacturer than the selling price. While the multiplication of brands is not, on the whole, to be commended, a point worthy of consideration is shown, viz: that where dealers have brands made to their order by regular manufacturers, the quality is always good and the commercial value is much greater the selling price than those sold direct by the manufacturer.

These are indeed "hard times," and whatever the cause, we may as well make up our minds to "face the music" and meet the fact. We doubt whether, under the most favorable circumstances possible, business will be generally good for two or three years. True, many manufacturing establishments are now starting up, after months of idleness; but nearly all of them open on condition of a heavy reduction in wages paid, and others are preparing to suspend. In view of these facts, our fruit growers cannot expect any great degree of prosperity, and we are surprised that many of them are adding to their acres of berries. Our advice is to devote all the land possible to vegetables. Fill your cellars with potatoes and turnips, your bins with corn, and you will be comparatively independent next winter.

No, we did not receive one; but we consider it a cowardly insult to thus attempt a "take off" upon a person's real or fancied mental or physical peculiarities.

Mrs. D. was a native of Wales, but came to America in early womanhood, living in Pennsylvania for many years. She came here with her husband and sons about thirty years ago. A warm-hearted Christian woman, she had many friends. Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian Church on Tuesday afternoon.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1894 contains descriptions that describe, not mislead; illustrations that instruct, not exaggerate. This year it comes to us in a suit of gold, and printed in eight different colors, besides black. Colored plates of chrysanthemums, poppies and vegetables. On the front cover is an exquisite bunch of Vick's New White Branching Aster, and on the back is New Double Aconitum; 112 pages filled with many new novelties of value; as well as all the old leading varieties of flowers and vegetables. It is really the finest thing of the kind we ever saw. Send ten cents to James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y., for the Guide, which will really cost you nothing, as you can deduct the ten cents from the first order you send them.

GEORGE JOHNSON'S place, on Eleventh Street, for sale or rent. Apply next door to GEORGE JOHNSON.

The Edw. Johnson place also for sale.

If the people don't act a hearing on the Wilson free trade bill before its passage they will afterwards, and when they do speak it will be with sufficient emphasis to make their meaning very clear.

AN EDITOR'S RECOMMENDATION.—Mr. C. F. Davis, editor of the Bloomfield, Iowa, Farmer, says: "I can recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to all sufferers with colds and croup. He chipped at it with his knife and finding that it did cut it like cheese, to use his own expression, he took a specimen of it home. Mineralogists to whom it was submitted at once perceived it to be a variety of silver, known otherwise by the name of 'horn silver,' because of its texture of horn. The mine, discovered by Godoy and a moneyed partner, developed silver in masses. Godoy was made, but the discoverer was so foolish as to sell his share, di-
