and with From Harpers Magazine. TOO LATE.

I remember that Corione was worse that afternoon, and I left her somewhat sadly. I hope that you will not throw aside all intorest in my story when you learn that Cor-rinne was my weekl-woman and a quadroon. Yuo do not understand how it could saddop me, this illness of hers, and her poor, thin face, and her slow slipping away out of my hands into etermity?" That is because you have never I ved among these people as I did in that hix months at Beaufort. To be sure, you might live among them a thousand years, and your soul and theirs never touch at a single Point; never take so much as a step- of common ground together; never speak the one to the other a word of that hidden language which God tones in which it was veiled. Almighty has established between soul and soul . But to live their life with them; to sorrow in their sorrows and weep in their tears, to be glad in their joys, to make all their little hopes, and plans, and fears your hopes, your plans, your fears, to help Chloe contrive Torn's new jacket out of his father's roat, to save Caesar's earnings for him, and go out with him to count the planks just bodgki for his cabin; to puzzle away. with may haired Jane over his alphabet, and turn and twist the contents of your own pocket to buy June the doll promised as a prize in the spelling class: this is what makes them dear.

And they were dear to me every one. from Jake down to the funny little coalblack baby born last week. They were my people. Mine whom Cod has given to me to help over their rough places-my poor, sorrewful people. Was it not a blessing, even for that little time, to see their sad eyes brighten and their gramped souls grow? I think it was.

Perhaps Corinne was my favorite-I do not claim to be infallible—but indeed she had stolen her way down into my heart before I knew it; she was such a pretty, sad eyed creature. And she had such a stery. She used to tell it to me sometimes; her patient head bent low upon her breast, her hands clutching at each other till it made my heart ache to see them. The thought of her followed me into the school-room that night; nor could I shake it off when I sat down among the crowd of upturned, sable faces for the evening lesson. It was one of those quiet evenings, I rethember, when the very air seemed to be asleep. The light that slauted in through the windows, and lay golden on the schoolroom floor, was fading lazily away; at the door the scarlet blossoms of a trumpet-vine peoped in and hung motionless; over the sandy slope and the pine barrens the winds were hushed; I could see, as I sat at my desk, the purpling water, and beyond a lit the image of the Creator and mine. You of still, soft sky! A very rough, bare room, I suppose that school-room was, but to me, with the shifting pictures that the ful evenings painted beyond the open door, and the low, sweet winds that crept in at the windows, and the rows of happy, quiet faces that had learned to look their "God bless you when I came in, it had become a very palace for fairness and dearness. Indeed, something greater, more holy than a palaco a sanctuary; for my humble work among these humble people had brought, I think, righer blessings to me than to them. I used to fancy that certain silent prayers of mine for guidance had consecrated that little wooden step at the door into an altar. But it is not my story that you want to hear. You suspect there was a story about that going to Beaufort, since women are not prone to go out into life to find a work, and that without a motive. It is possible. As to the title and the particular number of chapters, that is of little consequence to you or to any one. It is enough that, if I wont there full of bitter discontents and for learning, once-hungry." Checking sharp, rebellings, my steps were led straight himself then into a sudden reserve. to a Bothel I claimed to be a teacher - I. It was I who was taught of this sorrowing people. It was I who stood as a little child, abashed before the mystery of their grioti But I started to tell you about Corinne and what happened that evening 10 I had set David and Cesar fairly at work in their new copy-books, observed with quiet despair the third capsizing of Chloe's ink-bottle, and brought Jake triumphantly through his first a b-ab, when a shadow, in the door way obstructed my light, and I We understood one another then. I push looked are remained and perhaps a -spedimon of the remarkable sense which usually accompanies such presentments, that when I looked up I expected to see Corinne. / She not having left her bed for some weeks the clearness of perception exinbited in this expectation is apparent at once. So far from seeing Corinne I saw a man. He was tall and erect; I think the most massively built man I have ever seen. He had courteously removed his hat, and was looking around the room with a look of fore I had decided his eyes fell upon me us by our master's names. You won't be have had none since I practised this."

and he came into the room. I consigned interested to know many times I went Jake to the depths of his primer, and stopped out to meet him.

'Good-evening, Madam." "Good-evening, Sir-you were looking for the teacher? "I was looking for the teacher."

Can I be of service to you?"

"I should like to learn to write," if you please." I started. I looked at his soft, ourling hair, clear, dark skin, and regular feutures; also at the massive manliness of his figure, so erect; and towering above me. The hot, indignant blood rushed into my face. He saw it, perhaps, for his own cheek flushed slightly; he changed his hat from hand to hand.

"I came here yesterday. I have just escaped from nty master.

I wish type could convey to you the biting bitterness of that word-a bitterness the more intense from the smooth, low

"Very well; liere is an empty seat." I saw that the laconic, business-like an. wer suited him. He did not come there to be compassionated. He sat down in silence, and took up a primer that lay upon, the desk. I took a chair beside him.

"I know how to read, you see," turning the leaves with a curious smile; a smile that sent the hot blood into my cheeks again. I folded my paper, and took my pen from the desk. I should have been thankful at that moment to any power, natural or perternatural, that would have transported me hodily to some "far island of the sea," any where, out of that Beaufort school-room. and a last come and

"You would like to-begin?" He took up the paper, gravely.

He looked up at me when he had spelled out the words, then down again upon the paper. In that look I took the full measurement of the man's face. It was a face het I should have singled out in a crowd: finely inoulded, but thin; the eyes deep sunken, restless, deflant, lips deflant too. or curling into that curious smile, but never coarse; there was not a shadow of coarseness about him. Neither did the defiance in doing its worst make it an evil face, Nevertheless, hardly the face of a saint. I wonder if you know what I felt, sitting there teaching that man to write, his hair had begun to turn gray some years ago. Certainly my equal, possibly my superior, in such gifts as God has given him. A man. A man who had never owned his manhood; and the manhood was made in spoke of property? One would never object to teaching one's horse or one's parlor chairs to write? A rattle of marbles, in the corner where Plato and Cato were dogearning one spelling-book together, called me away presently.

"I will come back to you again," I said. Your name, if you please?

"Herschel Du Bois," sorawling the D over his sheet, absently. I pardoned him a faint flash of his restless eye. It was something to own a name. How he came by it mattered not. It was his in Beaufort.

The lazy light was dimming fast upon the floor, before I had gone my round among the dusky faces, and came back to him. I observed that every instant of the time had been diligently occupied; also, that his page was unblotted. He handed it to me with a certain proud humility that fitted his

"You like it?" I said.

He answered, with his curious smile I want to learn. Juicd to be hungry

"You will not need my teaching long,

Mr. Du Bois." Must I beg pardon for such a mistake? I assure you that it was instinctive, uncon sciousness, spoken quite as I should speak the word to other men. Being naturally absent-minded, perhaps you will excuse me that I did not remember he was black?

Be comforted; he had not forgotten it. His eyes caught mine quickly, his face flushing all over; then he turned it away, ed away the papers. "I wish you would tell me all about it." He turned back, the defiance gone from his mouth, a certain tremor in it.

"You-you are very good. But you hear so many of these stories." I wish you would tell me all about it."

The people had begun to disperse, breaking up in merry groups, they left us quite alone in that corner of the room before he spoke. Them slowly forehead almost as fair as mine, was turned toward me.

"Well ?" "That's pretty much all; only-

He turned allruptly from me, his eyes looking off through the window, some struggle in his face. Whatever was written in the dark places of this man's life there was that in it which only he and God should ever know. The mere story he might tell me, as he did, his voice smothored, intense.

"I loved her-my wife."

Some birds chirped to each other in their nest in the cypress by the window; the fain twitter filled the silence. Then-

She was all I had -all. And Colone Du Bois had a son."

He turned sharply around. His eyes startled me. You have seen eyes, perhaps, burned to a white heat?

"Colonel Du Bois had a son-Pierre Du Bois. For some reason' he always hated ton-field. I don't know what I said. He struck me, and Well, they sent me to the calaboose then. My master threatened to kill me. I wish he had. That was too good for me. He sold her. He sold my worth. wife. I have never seen her since. I suppose I never shalls That's all."

If I had dared to say one word! I only looked at him; and then I hid my face on the desk to hide the quick tears. At last I

A St. John (New Brunswick) paper tells bis story of vigilance on the part of a cusom house officer on the frontier. - Meeting a woman crossing a bridge with a bundle in her arms, he asked: "What have you there?" She hesitated, stammered, and then said, "Nothing dutiable." He insisted upon seeing it, she resisted, a strugele ensued, and at last she placed the bun dle in his arms, saying, "Take it then, and much good may it do you." Then she returned to St. Stephens, while he examined his treasure, which proved to be an infant a few days old. The mother has not been discovered; the poor-house officials refuse to take the child and the energetic officer is alle ed to enjoy it.

Dear A.

In tree upon the promised subject of this life. I am sware that I am hand or vois sense if am aware that I am hand-ling a delign matter, and exposing my-self to the large of being egutistical or partial, but I intend to "nothing ex-tenuate, he saught set down in malice," I shall so use myself to a statement of facts, leaving its for others to censure or praise ad my seem to them fitting.

Our people here are eminently social, intelligent and cultivated. I do not mean that kind of cultivation which is gained in the drawing from, the public assembly, or in strictly ashionable society, but that which is acquired by thought, study and contact with the carnest educated minds of the age. They have with comparitively few exceptions come here from large towns me. I found him alone one day by the cot | und cities, and enjoyed the social and intellectual advantages which such places afford, and while they are not disposed to ignore the conventionalities of society, are prepared to estimate them at their true

Emigrating from different sections of the ountry, we are more or less tinctured with with local projudices and wedded to local customs. Our early habits and associations have all been different, our modes of education in many respects were unlike, and of course our opinions on many points are dissimilar. These influences of course operating upon, us produce a very different order of things socially, from the stereoin their ancestral homes, which have never been disturbed by the breath of innovation, or the rumbling of the car of social progress. Society composed of such hetrogeneous low; neither did I assure him that it was elements as ours, cannot readily be fused good for a man to bear the yoke in his and blended into a mass of uniformity, or the individuals composing it be made to view things about them from the same > Consequently we recognise no leaders in fashion-no dictaters in religion-no wire pullers in politics. Sensation writers would find here poor materials for romance, as we have no "village belle" who breaks the hearts of the other sex by wholesale, and drives her own beside themselves with envy at her display of finery and coquetry. The "great man of the country" who figures so largely in modern novels as Sir Oracle, has not yet "come to town" and in the meantime we take the liberty of doing our own thinking, and carrying the result thereof into practical operation.

Some time since in the earliest period of the settlement, a stranger in search of information in regard to it, dropped into one of our stores and made several inquiries of the proprietor relative to the matter, and among other things asked, "Who are your leading men:" "Sir," replied Mr --'we are all leading men," and this same remark still holds true. We may as individuals be extremely tenacious of our own opinions, and prize them highly, but they are not worth a straw to our neighbor, who in his turn nurses some pet thing which is about as valuable to us as a last year's almanao or a dilapidated crows nest

Muchroom aristocracy does not thrive well in this climate, and would advise all persons ambitious of social distinction to give Hammonton "a wide berth." When such persons come among us with any assumptions of superiority, or pretensions to exclusiveness, we just indulge in a quiet laugh in our sleeves at their expense, and 'leave them out in the cold' until they learn sufficient wisdom to adapt themselves to the domocratic element in which they are placed I am aware that this independence of thought, this marked individuality has its disadvantages, and some here object to it on the ground that it obstructs a hermonious union of interest and prevents concert of action, on matters pertaining to the public Welfare. In this respect we differ, I am told, from our neighbors in Vineland, who are singularly unanimous upon all points of public interest. And yet with all of our variety in opinion, I believe that there are few communities where there is more kind feeling, and real harmony and less actual discord or meddlesome scandal, than is found here.

There are here three organized evangelical societies who hold stated meetings upon the Sabbath. Two years since the Baptist built a commodious church and have a large and increasing congregation. Dr. Kempton of Philadelphia, supplies the pulpit, to the universal acceptance of his congregation. The Presbyterians with Mr. Brace as pastor, are building a neat edifice for public worship, which will be a credit to the society, and an ornament to the place. The Methodist hold regular meetings in Elvin's Hall, but it is said that they too are making arrangements for building. The Universalists have no preaching, but have organized a sabbath coool with a good library. The Spiritualists, of which there is a large number, hold meetings every Salbath in Ellis' Hall, and have excellent speakers. We have four school houses in which excellent schools are kept, but they are insufficient to supply the needs of our increasing population, and this numbers will be increased at an early day, as we are a progressive people, and mean to keep pace with the popular demands.

"THE WOODEN END OF THE BOARD." -Gen. Banks, in a rocent speech delivered at Washidgton in favor of negro suffrage, told this anecdote:
"When I was younger than I am asset in the State of New Hampshire, at the town of Nashus, where I obtained my education at a University with a belfry at the topsaid water wheel under the lower stories. (laughter,) looking out with my fellow students, upon the smooth and glassy surface of the Merrimac river, that stream of perpetual beauty and perpetual life, saw a colored boy intimately known to me upon the surface, engaged in the pleasant exer-eise of skating, for it was wincer. While we looked upon the beautiful Merrimac. the little negro boy went in. You man. never have seen a negro under such dir-

cumstances. - (Laughter.) "We went down to him with all the speed possible. Going out to the middle of the river, we took up a plank and handed it to the negro boy; he grasped it with as much alacrity as any one of them will take a ballot when we give it to him. Just as we had got him out of the hole into which he had fallen, he fell off the plank and went in again. The second time he came up he wore an expression I shall never forget. - You may never have seen a negro under such circumstances.

(Laughter.) "He was speechless, his emotions suppressed all rhetoric; he did not indulge in any elegrence at all. He grasped the plank this time not with alacrity but with ferocity, and we brought him again to the surface. We thought he was a pegro saved form the Jaws of death; but off the ittle fellow supped and west down. You may pover have seen a negro under such circumstances. (Laughter.) We handed him the plank again, but he did not touch it this time. You may never have seen a negro refuse a plank under such circum stances. (Laughter.) He addressed us a speech, and I pever heard a speech that contained so much touching eloquence as was embodied in that little negro's speech Please gib dis nigger de wooden end ob dat board.' (Laughter.) You see the oud we had given him was the loy end. It was the same icy end that the Southern people have been holding out to him for two hundred years. He was entirely satisfied that the wooden end was the bust. "Now, sir, what we propose for the negro in this country is, to give him the wooden end of the board. He has had the icy end for more than two centuries. The report to the Corresponding Secretary of has come upon the men who extended to him the icy end of the board. "He will recoive from that act of justice the same joy which the little negro experienced. (Grast applause." -

> WHIPPING YOUNG LADIES. - A VALL CO. rious discussion is going on in the columns of a London periodical, called the "Queen," on the subject of whipping young ladies in English schools. A correspondent of that paper wrote to inquire of the editors if it is true that young ladies are thus "birched," the same as boys. This brought out & number of letters, in which it appears that the practice does prevail in many of the most fashionable boarding schools for cirls; and that the girls are "birched" in a degrading style, sometimes in their rooms and sometimes before the whole school. The particulars would hardly bear repetition in these columns. A culprit who is to be punished in this way is also made to pay for it in money; she has to pay for the "rod." she has to pay the servant who robes her for punishment, she has to pay the governess who whips her, and then; when it is all over, she is compelled to kiss the rod and thank her tormentors. Young. ladies of the aristocratic classes, sixteen and seventeen years old, have recently gone through this degredation, and the facts are vouched for by the names of their relatives. It would seem to be incredible, but there is no room for doubt about it. This is the civilization of our English kingmen, who are so much shocked by the imaginary bar barism of American society Ledge.

That was not an empty remark of the old woman from the constry, who, while on a visit to her city daughter, saw a water fall for the first time. What its con-call that great stuffed bag, Mary? "That's a waterfall, ma," "A waterfall, It looks more like a land-slides

Dr. Schenck, I will now make my statement to gou, as follows:—Abmid algibren months age I was attacked with a severe cough, and it settled on my langs; I could not retain anything I ate, and somered with avaning levers and night sweats. I was 'rery much 'reduced. The whites of my ones were very yellow filtewise my skin; my appetite all gone, and anable to digest what I did sat; bowels swelen, irregular and coutive. I was very low splitted, and had such violent spells of cough. I was 'rery low splitted, and had such violent spells of cough. I was 'the morning that they would hat one or two hours.

I then would be pourly exhausted, and was er I then would be nearly exhausted, and was entirely unable to lie on my left side. I cannot describe my wretched suffering as I would wish to do. Every argue in my hedy was diseased or deranged. Such was my situation at this time, and I was confined to my bed from the last of February, 1802, to Yune, 1862, hot able to sit up. I had the best medical attendance the whole of the time. My cough was so keny had that it racked me very much. I as this time raised a large quantity of thick, yellow, offensive matter, sometimes with blood, and it was generally accompanied by nausta and a furred and thick contact tongne. At the time of coughing so hadly sometimes with bridge, and it was generally accompanied by masses and a furred and thick coated tongne. At the time of coughing so badly I would nave sharp, shooting pains in my left side and heart, hight sweats, and soreness all through my whole cheat; and much inward fever, pain in my back and under my shoulder blades and in the small of my back; and at times so severe that it would throw me into spasma. Now my physician gave me, up to die. Others had, and the best of them, but they could do nothing for me, and at that time I was nothing but skin and hones. I then was in the wastern part of Missouri. In June hast we left there for the Rack, and in Angust last we come to New York, and I was so reduced that I could only walk a little with my hushald's help. After I had been here much better for a time and then I had again to a short time the salt water breeze made me feel much better for a time and then I had again to call a physician for aid. We had fur of the best physicians of New York on the diseases of the lungs, and doctors of all kinds, but of no nearly the lungs, and doctors of all kinds, but of no nearly the lungs were too far gone for any one to cure me. But at this time I was on my feet about the house, not able to do much of anything. In November last I grew worse, and the consumption diarrhon set in and lasted about eight wooks. We had tried all and everything that I could grasp at like a dying person for my diseases came to see me the last of the wock, and brought the Sunday Morcury. In it was an account of a great cure performed by Dr. Schenck. She read it to me, and it was so much like my disease that I asked my busband to go and see tim for me. At this time I had given me all hopes of ever gotting well again, and made my peace with Cod, to be ready whonever he called for me.

On the 27th of January, 1863; my husband colled on Dr. Schenck, 32 Bond street; New York, and stated to him my case, which ar request fog him to call and see me, which ha did, and examined me with the respirementer. When he was about to go I asked him if he could enre me?
