A Wonderful Saving.

The largest Methodist Church in Georgia, calculated to use over one hundred gallons of the usual kind of mixed paint in painting their church.

They used only 83 gallons of the Longman & Martin's Paint mixed with 24 gallons of linseed oil. Actual cost of paint made was less than $1.30 per gallon.

Saved over eighty, ($80) dollars in paint, and got a big donation besides. EVERY CHURCH will be given a liberal quantity whenever they paint. Many houses are well painted with four gallons of L. & M. and three gallons of linseed oil mixed therewith. Wears and covers like gold. These Celebrated Paints are sold by H. McR. Little.

The Revenge and the Motive.

To the People of Hammonton:

I deem it not out of place to state that the attacks made upon me by a certain party are not only untrue, but prompted by motives of revenge.

Having lived in this town about twenty five years, I am willing to leave my character and reputation with those who know me.

The real cause of the attacks upon me is that I would not allow commissions to be made on the booklet issued by the Board of Trade; and after a display on the part of one who exhibited his character in its true light on the floor of the Board, I received the unanimous thanks of the Board for the faithful performance of my duty, as well as the personal approval of such leading members and citizens as Messrs. J. A. Burgan, A. J. Rider, H. M. Phillips, Wm. Colwell, Wm. H. Bernshouse, Kirk Spear, Harry L. Monfort, John Walther, and others, (who were present at the meeting of the Board of Trade) for the work done by my committee.

At the proper time, the people of Hammonton will know more of this matter. Only one on a par with an assassin will attack a man by insinuations and deny him the right of defence; and only he who attempts to cover a falsehood will choose his language in a manner to hide the motive of his attack.

I will always be found ready to protect the Town and the Board of Trade against the adventurer and the grafter, whenever he appears; and I have no fear of the result.

Although for several weeks previous to the election, considerable display was made regarding "the views of Mr. Jacobs," yet our citizens manifested their appreciation of my efforts by giving me a two-thirds vote in town, and nearly a three to one vote in the second precinct, despite the fact that my name was on one ticket only, and both the office and name had to be written on the opposition ticket. So much for the "influence" (?) of my traducers.

The evidence of the three hundred witnesses at the town meeting is more potent than the impotent and cowardly attacks of one who aims only to satisfy revenge. P. H. JACOBS.

TWILIGHT ON THE FARM.

The dews come down, and shadows gather in field and lane,
Low in the west a band of black gives promise unto rain,
It is the twilight hour—and given o'er to calm and rest,
It brings to home a benediction and is blest.

The boys come and bathe their faces at the cooling well,
Afair and faint, then near and sweet, tinkles the lead cow's bell.
It is the twilight hour—and stars are starting from the deep,
High heaven's herald sent to watch that men may sleep.

The father comes, a man of many years of toll and care,
Who smiles to see the candle in the self-same window there;
It is the twilight hour—and with the farm work amply done
He feels a poor man's joy to think the day is won.

Then all sit down to eat the evening meal, and far away
A wagon rumbles out the neighbor's name, who loves delay.
It is the twilight hour—and free from day's unending quest
It brings to home a benediction and is blest.

Miss Fairfax's Husband

JAMES TADDMAN, sub-editor of the Dendene Gazette, was busily correcting proofs when the door of his room was opened rather suddenly, and a gentleman of some six-and-twenty winters entered.

"I say, Taddman—"

"Well?"

The sub-editor just grunted this out, and didn't turn his head.

"I'm in an awful fix. I—I don't know what to do!"

"What's up?" murmured Mr. Taddman, still keeping his eyes fixed on his proofs.

"I've got to interview Miss Fairfax, the great singer. The governor left word that I was to see her to-night at eleven after the concert, and that the interview was to go into to-morrow's paper."

"Better look sharp, then," growled the sub-editor; "it's 10:45 now, and I shall want all your copy by 12:30 at the latest."

"But—but—I can't do it!" exclaimed the new-comer, desperately.

"Why not?" replied the sub-editor. "You've interviewed heaps of people before—in a fashion."

Mr. Taddman didn't think much of Danvers, the one and only reporter the Dendene Gazette could boast of. Danvers was far too amateurish in his work, and hadn't the "cut" of a newspaper man about him. Besides, the governor had only engaged him because he was willing to work for a low salary.

"Well, it's just like this, Taddman," explained Danvers, coming up and standing at his superior officer's elbow, "Miss Fairfax is my wife!"

Taddman dropped his pen, and turned round in one and the same moment.

"Your wife?"

"Yes, my wife—I swear it. I don't care to talk about it," the young man went on, hurriedly. "But I'll tell you all now I've told you some. We were married when we were only boy and girl. I was nineteen, she a year younger. Three months after our marriage we had a frightful quarrel—chiefly because I had deceived her about money matters—and we parted by mutual consent. She was at one of the musical academies, and I had just left Rugby. My father disowned me for getting married without his consent, and so, instead of going to Oxford, I had to earn a living how and where I could. After trying various things I drifted into journalism, and that's why I'm here, working all I know for twenty-five shillings a week. And she—I have followed her career, although she has quite lost sight of me—she is famous, rich, courted by the great, written about and talked about, while I, her husband, am only a miserable back of a reporter. And now I have to go and interview her!"

He sank into a chair and buried his face in his hands. For some moment Taddman gazed at him in blank amazement. This man the great Fairfax's lawful husband! And told off to interview her! Taddman was tongue-tied.

He looked at his watch. It was five minutes to eleven.

"Look here, young 'un, you must go," he at length said, touching Danvers on the shoulder and speaking more gently; "it'll mean the sack if you don't. You know what the governor is. You'd find it rather hard to get another editor. You know, I'd do it for you myself, but I can't stir from here until the paper goes to bed. So put a good face on it, man, and go. Bless you! she won't recognize you. Her husband was a smooth-faced boy, and you've got a long mustache—and (he had never noticed them before) quite a sprinkling of gray hairs. Besides, you look a good deal older than you really are. Here, rouse up and get along! We must have the interview!"

Danvers got up.

"Thanks, old chap," he said, "I'll be off, I didn't think of the alteration in my looks. Of course she won't know me."

And without more ado he put on his hat and hurried away to the interview.

He had no idea that the "interview" consented to be interviewed, the rendezvous being her dressing-room behind the stage.

Miss Fairfax was rolling up her music when her maid, Jones, was good enough to inform her that "a reporter" was anxious to see her.

"From the Dendene Gazette?" she inquired.

"Yes, miss—I think it was some name like that."

Miss Jones's experience of press representatives was a very wide one. She didn't think much of the one who was here to-night. He wasn't so free-spoken as them London gents, with their shiny 'ats and long frock-coats—no, nor so free with his money—at any rate he didn't look as if he was. Yes, Miss Jones liked the London gentlemen, especially when they attributed to her mistress a host of clever things which she never said.

"Ask him to come in," said Miss Fairfax. "Good evening," she murmured pleasantly, as Danvers entered; "will you sit down? And now what can I do for you?"

Poor Danvers was quite dazzled by his wife's wondrous beauty. She was certainly a girl when he married her, but he never imagined for a moment that she would degenerate into the lovely woman he now beheld. She was in excellent health. Her eyes were bright and sparkling, and she looked a very queen as she moved to and fro in her costly white satin dress, while diamonds shone out from between the coils of her dark hair and burnt fiercely on her breast.

Danvers pulled himself together with a great effort, and put the usual round of questions to her. She answered them with astonishing readiness, and told him the tale of her career with striking accuracy. Then, seeing that her visitor did not appear to be quite at his ease, the singer began to talk about the songs she loved—talked in a low, sweet voice which rose and fell in glorious cadences, that fell upon the ear like the purring of a stream. At any other time Danvers would have hailed such a speech with glee, for it was eminently printable and interesting; but now he only wrote mechanically, for his thoughts were not in his work—only his pencil-point.

During the latter part of the interview Jones had been assisting her young mistress in putting on her "things." Jones, as has been said, was quite used to interviewers, and she smiled impatiently several times during Miss Fairfax's discourse, for her mistress was more communicative than usual—far more communicative indeed than she was to the London gentlemen, who, in consequence, had to draw upon their imaginations in order to fill up their columns. It was quite immaterial to Miss Fairfax how the interviewers who came to see her were dressed. Her business manager (a most discreet gentleman) had directed her to grant interviews whenever she could, and so, in giving the representative of the Dendene Gazette all this information, she was only transacting part of her day's work.

It was not likely that Miss Fairfax bestowed two thoughts on the appearance of this very quiet member of the reporting tribe, who seldom lifted his eyes from his note-book—it was not likely that she noticed, as Jones did, that his coat was very old, and a trifle thin for the season; that his collar and cuffs, though quite clean, possessed frayed edges; that his boots wanted repainting, and that he would have been the better for a new hat. Nor that you could find much fault with Danvers' clothes at first glance.

It was only when you came to look into them that you saw some serious defects. After much consideration, Miss Jones came to the conclusion that the "reporter" had been good-looking. She put him down as five-and-thirty now, and married, with perhaps half a dozen children, and a scolding wife. This was because her quick eyes forsook the gray hairs, and the lines along the forehead and certain weary shadows on his face. Of course, Miss Jones had no idea that the "interview" er's life was a wearying one indeed, for many a time and oft he had to stand for hours ankle deep in the mud that is present at every stock sale; had to rush about over half the county at all times and in all weathers; had to do two and sometimes three men's work; had to tout for advertisements; soft-soap good Dendene citizens who agreed with his paper's "opinions"; had to chronicle a host of silly little-tittle, and cover reams of paper with the common names of nobodies.

So it was no wonder that Danvers had turned a little bit gray, and did not look peculiarly cheerful. And it did not improve his looks to go home—after banding in his "copy"—and lie awake all night thinking of his beautiful wife, in the heyday of her career, belauded wherever she went, rich, and without a ripple in the calm sea of her existence to trouble her, while he—

But he was glad she did not recognize him.

It was about half-past eight on the following morning. Danvers was making a miserable attempt to eat some breakfast, when no less a person than Jones was suddenly shown into his room by his landlady, who never put herself out of the way to announce a visitor.

"Oh," began Miss Jones, "Miss Fairfax would be glad if you could see her some-time this morning. She wants something altered in the interview, and hopes you can publish the correction next Wednesday."

The Dendene Gazette, we should have mentioned, was a bi-weekly.

"Very well," said Danvers, "I will wait upon Miss Fairfax immediately."

"Crown Hotel," said Jones, laconically, and went.

The quality of the breakfast lowered the interview another twenty-five per cent in her estimation.

There was a big fire in the "Crown Hotel's" best sitting-room when Danvers was shown into it. The table was also laid for breakfast. Danvers sat down with a sigh. The ordeal wasn't over then, yet.

There was a frown of skirts, and Danvers, standing up, bowed politely to Miss Fairfax, whose beauty, he observed, bore the test of sunlight unflinchingly.

"Pray sit down," she said; "I merely wanted to ask you—"

She stopped speaking. Involuntarily he looked up at her, and the blood surged gleefully.

He saw that she was surveying him with a world of tenderness in her eyes. She recognized him, and she still loved him!

Without more ado she dropped on her knees beside him, and laid one of her white hands caressingly on his threadbare sleeve.

"Oh, Charlie!" she cried, with a little sob in her voice, "won't you make it up?"

He gazed at her wildly. He could not believe it. But yet there was that look in her face.

"Oh, no, no!" he exclaimed, turning away, "it would not do. You are so famous and rich, while I—I am what you see. I—I had better go. What will people say when they hear—"

His failure of a career, his shabbiness, his wretchedness—the thought that he had deceived her—these things overwhelmed him. He would not take advantage of her generosity.

So he rose to his feet and walked unsteadily toward the door. But before he had gone half a dozen paces, she was by his side.

"Charlie," she said, "I love you. I have always loved you. I loved you when we parted. I have tried to find out where you were. Charlie—let us make it up!"

He stopped and looked down at her. Her eyes were suffused with tears.

"My darling!" he exclaimed, and clasping her in his arms, impriated her fair brow a kiss of reconciliation which dispersed the gray shadows of the past, with all its black clouds of misery and hopelessness.

And so, hand in hand, they started anew on life's long journey.—R. H. HOME.

WITHOUT A STAIRWAY.

Curious House that Used to Stand in Washington City.

Years ago a story was told of a naval officer who wanted a house to please his own taste in every particular. He drew the plans himself, and then in the hands of a builder instructed him to see that they were carried out in every detail. The officer went to sea for a year's cruise, and returned home the house had been completed with the utmost regard to the plans and specifications left by the officer. He was taken through the house, and expressed the utmost admiration in everything he saw.

"Now," he said, "we will go and see the second floor."

"Come right out this way," replied the builder, "and you will find a ladder."

The seafaring man was a little puzzled, but he followed the builder, who had planned the house with the greatest care, but forgot to put in a stairway.

The story of the naval officer never had a certificate of authenticity attached to it. But an anecdote in which a house has been built without a stairway is on record.

It finally became the home of John Boyle, who was for A Wise Old Muskrat.

When a boy, still barbarian enough to delight from a love of the money into a boy's empty pockets, once caught a muskrat in a step, that slid off into deep water, and so drowned the muskrat, he was due to the careful instructions of Natty, at whose feet I sat to learn the method of trapping. For often an animal, when caught in a trap, will snap at the leg off his body, and so escape, leaving his foot in the jaws. This is common enough; and it is said now to be that sometimes I would find a muskrat in my traps that had been so badly bitten at the hands of the trappers.

I remember one big muskrat, when I stopped short at noticing a queer thing about him. The trap was set in shallow water where muskrats came up to draw the creature's head and give him something to eat. He should put his foot in the trap, and the trap would snap shut on his foot. But the muskrat, instead of putting his foot in the trap, he had cut off both his forepaws at different times, and been twice caught in many of his inventions. When he came to the stream he rose on his hind legs, and waddled through the grass, and I saw with a horrible shock that he had cut off both his forepaws at different times, and been twice caught in many of his inventions. your brain. The dirt under your finger-nails is likely to work into your thoughts. Grease spots down the front of your coat will destroy self-respect almost as quickly as a habit of lying. Tidiness is one of the cheapest luxuries in the world. It is also one of the most comfortable. When you know, when you are "dead sure" that you are just right—"perfectly correct"—from hat to shoe-tie, the king of England couldn't stare you out of countenance; he couldn't embarrass you, and he wouldn't if he could.

Needed No Assistance.
I am
That you can't, without help, get through that pot of jam.
Said Christopher Keeps: "Of that notion be rid,
For I can, much obliged all the same."
And he did!

A Young Telegrapher.
Robert T. Baird, aged 11 years, the son of Robert L. Baird, of Grovania, Ga., holds a unique place among the bright youths of Georgia. He is a fast and accurate telegraph operator, and has already done regular work in Western Union offices. At one time he was in charge of the office at Vienna as day operator. Young Baird seems to have taken to the key by instinct. When only 7 he could sit at the instrument and send before his feet were cold. At 10 he could receive, and now he is considered a competent operator.

When Children Play.
Sometimes the children play outside from early until late.
Then blank and still the nursery floor.
The whole house seems to wait.
But when the children come indoors
They race upstairs and shout,
They tramp across the nursery floor
And pull the things about.
Then all the house seems full of life,
The nursery, stairs and hall;
And on the playground out-of-doors
The blackness seems to fall.
—Good Housekeeping.

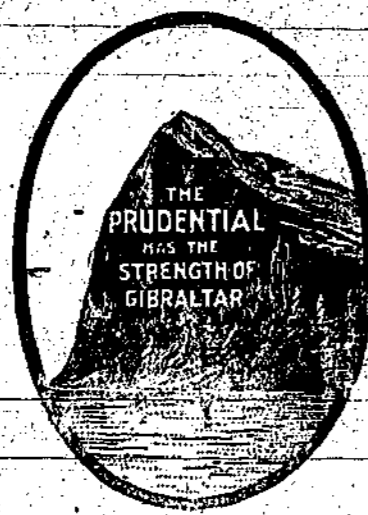

Baseball in Porto Rico.
The San Juan News says that Americans have virtually made baseball the national outdoor sport of Porto Rico. Tennis tournaments are also held, and football, cycling and other pastimes have been tried to some extent. When a Northerner is acclimated, it is said, he enjoys the various forms of outdoor exercise much as we do in the North.

Mine Tailor's Brother.
Constantine Stephanov, Yale '00, who paid his way through Yale by running the night car on the local electric road, met his old Yale friends and his former trolley chums in New Haven a few nights ago as a representative of the Macedonian government, sent to this country to arouse the sympathies of the American people for his persecuted countrymen and women. He called on President Hadley and several of his old Yale professors. When Stephanov left Yale he studied a while in Germany and then went to his home, from which he had been absent for twelve years. He was soon after imprisoned and members of his family brutally treated. By the influence of an American consul he was released and sent to the United States to tell the State Department of the Turkish atrocities in his land. He is the brother of Mine Tailor, who, with Ellen Stone, was long held in captivity by Turkish brigands. He says that Macedonia is not fighting for independence, but for existence and the sanctity of the home.—Boston Herald.

Foiled Again.
"Itchfume meth professed love, proud gorill!" cried the heavy villain, "and by meth bulldozer I'll dash yeh over yonder beetling cliff."
"Huh!" cried the beautiful heroine, glancing in the direction indicated by his grimy forefinger. "That's only a bluff!"—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

There are in Paris something like one thousand co-operative cab plying, supplied by 16 to 18 co-operative cab yards, which are now in a flourishing condition, some of them very large and substantial undertakings. The men in this service net on an average about sixty cents a day above the outside cabman's rate of compensation.

The Booklets.

*Ten thousand booklets of the Town of Hammon, beautifully illustrated, have just been issued by the Board of Trade. Every citizen is entitled to a copy, free of charge, which may be procured by calling on the Secretary, Dr. Charles Cunningham, at his residence, Second Street.

Additional copies may be obtained by paying the following prices:
eight for 25 cents; three for 10 cents; or 5 cents each. These prices include envelopes for mailing, when desired. They can be purchased of the Secretary, from P. H. Jacobs, Chairman of Printing Committee, and at Henson's news room.

The cost of these booklets largely exceeds the above prices, and all money obtained from their sale will be kept separate from the general funds of the Board of Trade, and be used exclusively for advertising the Town in other ways.

Cents will pay for a three months' trial subscription

SATURDAY, MAR. 26, 1904

STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican voters of New Jersey, and all who favor the continuance of the policy which have secured prosperity at home and honor abroad, under the wise administration of President McKinley and President Roosevelt, are requested to join in the election of delegates to a State Convention to be held at the Taylor Opera House, in the City of Trenton, on Tuesday, May 10, 1904

at 12 o'clock, noon, for the purpose of selecting four delegates at large and four alternate delegates to the Republican National Convention which will assemble at Chicago on June 21st, next, for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice-President, to be supported at the next general election.

The basis of representation under this call will be one delegate for each 200 Republican votes cast at the last gubernatorial election, and one delegate for each fraction thereof exceeding 100 votes. The said delegates from each county will be apportioned among the several sub-divisions of the counties by the respective county committees. In counties where the number of wards and townships exceeds the allotted number of delegates, it is suggested that fractional representation be given, so that each ward and township may be represented.

Under the rules heretofore adopted, each county delegation will be required to elect at this convention one member of the Republican state committee, to serve a term of four years, excepting the counties of Essex and Hudson, for each of which the county delegation will elect two members.

Under the rules heretofore adopted, each county delegation will be required to elect at this convention one member of the Republican state committee, to serve a term of four years, excepting the counties of Essex and Hudson, for each of which the county delegation will elect two members.

The Congressional district convention, to select two delegates and two alternates from each Congressional district, shall be held as may be directed by the Congressional Committee of each of the said districts, in the same manner as conventions are called for the nomination of a representative in Congress.

If in any Congressional district there is no Republican Congressional Committee, the Republican State Committee will appoint from the residents of such district a committee for the purpose of calling a district convention to elect district delegates.

By order of the State Committee.
EDWARD C. STOKES,
Acting Chairman.
JOHN S. GRISWOLD, Sec'y.

—John A. Holzer has bought the Jas. W. Gillingham barber shop. He is a skillful workman, — was employed in the G. F. Leas shop for over eight years. The new move seemed sudden, but the bargain was only consummated about 11:50 last Saturday night. John offered Mr. Leas ten days notice of the change, but was excused; and went to work in the new shop on Monday.

—There are no gutters on Third Street, either side, from Peach to Maple Street; consequently the sidewalks, worn by use, are chosen as drains for surplus water after every storm, and are either three-top deep in mud or washed into gullies by the strong current. Referred to the next Highway Committee.

—Miss Hattie Seely, daughter of Joseph H. Seely, formerly of Hammon, was married on Wednesday, March 18th, 1904, — Morris H. McAnney being the happy bridegroom. The ceremony took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin L. Spooner, her cousins, at Milo Center, N. Y. E. Leroy Hopple, of Philadelphia, was groomsmen, Miss Edith Lockwood, of Penn Yan, bridesmaid. It is stated that they will visit Hammon on their bridal trip, coming by the way of Washington.

—Miss Armstrong, whom many remember as living here last summer, for her health, died on Thursday evening, in the Wattle house, near the Lake. She returned to Philadelphia in the fall; improved to health, but was stricken here last Saturday, only to succumb to consumption. Her body was taken to the city on the noon train, Tuesday last, March 22nd, 1904, at the residence of Wm. H. Burgess, aged 75 years. She, with her husband, came to Hammon in 1880. For a long time they were in business here, but sold out and went to Denver, Colorado, about 1882. Mrs. Tremper has spent much of the time here since her husband's death. She was a kind, helpful woman, with many warm friends, who miss her daily. Funeral services were held at Mr. Burgess' home, yesterday forenoon, conducted by Rev. Paul S. Hoffman. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery, where her husband and son were also buried.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

Between
HARPER FEINBERG,
Petitioner,
and
ANNA FEINBERG,
Defendant.

On Petition for Divorce

The petitioner having filed his petition in the above stated cause and process of citation having been issued and returned according to law; and it appearing by affidavit that the defendant, Anna Feinberg, resides out of the State of New Jersey, and that process could not be served upon her; it is on this twenty-seventh day of February, one thousand nine hundred and four, on motion of A. J. King, of counsel with the petitioner, ordered, that the said absent defendant do appear and answer the petitioner's petition on or before the twenty-ninth day of April next, or that, in default thereof such decree be made against her as the Chancellor shall think equitable and just.

And it is further ordered that the notice of this order, prescribed by law and the rules of this court, shall, within twenty days hereafter be served personally on the said absent defendant, by a delivery of a copy thereof to her, or be published within the said twenty days in the "South Jersey Republican," a public newspaper, printed at Hammononton in this State, and continued therein for four weeks successively, at least once in every week, and in case of such publication, that a copy thereof be also mailed within the same time to the said absent defendant, directed to her postoffice address, if the same can be ascertained in the manner prescribed by law and the rules of this court.

NOTICE.

To ANNA FEINBERG:—
By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, wherein Harper Feinberg is petitioner and you are defendant, you are required to appear and answer the petitioner's petition on or before the twenty-ninth day of April next, or in default such decree will be taken against you as the Chancellor shall think equitable and just. The said petition is filed against you for a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Dated February 27, 1904.
