OR

J. H. CARPENTER.

The following we publish by request, not because we take any stock in the gush of sentiment contained therein, for we know that there are plenty who received the bounty of our free and hearty Northerners, who would have stabbed the givers with as little com-punctions of conscience as did the brute Currie shoot, without cause or provocation, the actor Potter, in Marshall Texas, only a few days ago, simply because he was a northern gentleman, for there is no other reason. The hate of the rebels is as bitter to-day as it was at the beginning of the rebellion. And they are rebels to the government still, in both word and deed, and when a rebel is conquered by kindness, it will be when they have been transformed into men, as many of them are not now. We should indeed be happy, could we be convinced of the truth of the sentiment of the song, but when the rebel papers, rebel Congressmen, and the southern people by thousands and hundreds of thousands, in words and in acts proclaim that they have not changed, and continue to mourn the lost cause, and eulogize the arch-traitor Jeff. Davis, such sentiment is hypocritical cant, a mocking jibe, an insult to the loyal people of the north.

Conquered at Last.

You came to us once, O brothers, in wrath,
And rude desolation followed your path.

You conquered us then, but only in part,
For a stubborn thing is the human heart.

So the mad wind blows in his might and main And the forests bend to his breath like grain;

Their heads in this dust, and their branches broke;

But how shall he soften their hearts of oak?

You swept o'er our land like the whirl-wind's wing,

But the human heart is a stubborn thing.

We laid down our arms, we yielded our will;
But our "heart of hearts" was unconquered still.

"We are vanquished," we said, "but our wounds must heal;"

We gave you our swords, but our hearts were steel.

"We are conquered," we said, but our hearts were sore,

And "wee to the conquered" on every door.

But the spoiler came, and he would not spare, The angel that walketh in darkness was there:

He walked thro' the valley, walked thro' the street,
And he left the print of his fiery feet.

In the dead, dead, dead, that were everywhere,
And buried away with never a prayer.

From the desolate land, from its very heart, There went forth a cry to the uttermost part:

You heard it, O brothers!—With never a measure

You opened your hearts, and poured out your treasure.

O! Sisters of Mercy, you gave above these!
For you helped, we know, on your bended knees.

Your pity was human, but oh! it was more,
When you shared our cross and our burden bore.

Your lives in your hands, you stood by our side;

Your lives for our lives, you lay down and died.

And no greater love hath a man to give,
Than lay down his life that his friends may live.

You poured in our wounds the oil and the wine, That you brought to us from a Hand Divine.

You conquered us, brothers; our swords we gave;

We yielded now our hearts,—they are all we have.

Our last ditch was there, and it held out long;
It is yours, O friends! and you'll find it strong.

Your love had a magic, diviner than art, And "Conquered by Kindness" we'll write on our heart.

"Morley's" Letter From New York.

[FROM OUR OWN REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.]

NEW YORK, March 26, 1879.

THE CRY OF HARD TIMES.

Grumblers still refer to these as "hard times."

What do they tell by? Look things squarely in the face and what do we see? Failures? There have been less in four months than during the corresponding period for many years. Business at a general standstill? Trade is better in New York to-day than any day since the infated bubble burst. The merchant and manufacturer instead of twenty per cent. profit makes ten—and he calls that "hard times."

Why, bless his heart, that ten per cent. will buy as good a house, rent as valuable store, purchase as many shoes, coats and hats, and hire as many clerks or mechanics as the twenty per cent. ever did. The clerk gets less pay, but every item of living is less. One class of men has suffered —those who were carrying heavy interest-bearing debts. They have generally lost everything, and when men see how sadly shrunken they are, they are sure the times have been hard —and so they have. But what is the sign that times are hard now? When men will pay $30,000 to $50,000 for a corner residence lot on Fifth Avenue without a sign of a building on it; when you can see silk stockings sold at Stewart's every day from $8 to $15 a pair; when you see as I do a ceaseless tide of femininity, in silks and sealskins, trooping along Fourteenth Street to the dry goods houses, you will wonder what has become of the "hard times?" Go through Tiffany's upper floor and you will see nearly a hundred bronzes and marbles ticketed for over $2,000 a piece. They are kept to sell and they go every day into Murray Hill drawing rooms.

A Broadway baker, I am credibly informed, did a business of $250,000 last year, mostly in cakes and bon bons, and last Sunday's Herald had over 3,400 advertisers represented in its sixty-eight columns of advertisements. If you say these are the signs in upper-tendom, I ask: who paid $60,000 to see the late walk? Is any one asking for soup-kitchens? New York's poor are no more numerous, in proportion, or needy to-day, than they always were. Business men make less money, but it goes farther, and while I have nothing to say concerning your town, I emphatically assert that he who would find unusual evidences of hard times in New York must, like Diogenes, search around with a lantern.

A REMINISCENCE OF GETTYSBURG.

Can you stand an army incident? If not, you needn't read it, that's all! A student of the free College of the City of New York called on me the other day, mentioning Gen. Alex. S.
Webb as now President of that institution.
"General Webb!"—A train of the most stirring memories of my life started at the name, for it is indelibly associated with a sight such as a man is privileged to look upon but once in a lifetime, and few men ever saw even once. It was at Gettysburg. I was an artilleryist, and it so happened that when that heroic charge was made by Longstreet's divisions and those splendid lines of gallant Southerners came sweeping grandly across that field up into the very teeth of our guns, the time came when we must cease firing, for our own men were so closely engaged with the Confederates that they would receive as much damage from our fire as the enemy would. During this interval I had, what a soldier in battle rarely has, leisure to watch. On a little knoll just to our right stood Webb's Brigade of the old Second Corps. In their front the brave Kemper was hurling down his brigade of Virginians upon them. Forward and backward went that thin and constantly thinning line of brave boys, the officers rushing up and down behind the impoverished ranks, waving their swords and cheering on the men.
Towards the left of the line stood two color sergeants bearing the only colors visible, and these they waved slowly two and two in that leaden storm in the face of the opposing host.
The battle smoke hung like a thick cloud above and in front of those brave men; the deafening roar of battle, the lurid line of fire dimmed by the thickening smoke, the hoarse shouts of the brave men on either side who struggled madly for victory, the roar of shell and whistle of bullet swerved not those heroic men from their perilous duty—the fate of a nation hung upon their bayonets and they knew it, and every man became a hero! I stood looking upon that scene perfectly transfixed, the blood tingling through every vein, sweeping in great, hot successive waves through my frame; and a thrillling through every nerve such as you and I have felt when reading some grand heroic deed of ages past and gone. Suddenly an officer broke from the line, hallooed, coatless, pale, leaning heavily on his sword, limping rapidly towards where I stood. A great shell rent at his right hip was letting the rich blood in streams down his leg. He was evidently seeking help to reach the hospital? Not he! When near enough to be heard above the roar, he demanded, "Who is the commander of this Battery?" I pointed to Major Fitzhugh, commanding the Artillery Brigade, to whom he rushed and besought him for God's sake to send a section of guns to the support of his men, he could not hold them against that fierce onslaught ten minutes longer. Two guns dashed at a gallop towards Webb's ensanguined ranks; they broke way right and left with a cheer, and our canister tore great gaps in Kemper's lines. He fell wounded. But now come on Armistead and Garrett with their brigades, and again the odds are with the Southerners. Would our brave boys be forced to give way? Would the army be cut in two at that point? How could it be maddening! Oh, somebody give me a glass, now, if ever! The fate of the army hangs upon the country—hangs up on the life of the Union—Is there no help? To the right a thin line of disabled artillery, dead and dying men, and scarcely struggling lines. To the left, the same. But what's that? A flag comes up the hill from the rear; following hard after it come five solid columns of troops, double-quickening it under that flag July run. A moment more, and on the flag we make out the blue St.
George's Cross of the 2d Division, 6th Corps—and then we know that after the word "Gettysburg" should be written "Victory!" But the die was cast before they could fire a shot.
Webb's Brigade made a fight that day which the Imperial Guard of Bonaparte never surpassed, and which, for heroism and results, deserves to be handed down among the proudest annals of war. I say every man in that poor, weak line of Webb's was a hero that day, fit to be ranked with Cœur de Lion; and as the sun went down upon that bloody field I registered a vow never to come telling my countrymen how that handful of heroes fought for the dear old flag at Gettysburg. Again I have performed that vow!

MONDAY.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1879.

The air is thick with rumors and has been since Saturday. Springer at a Democratic caucus of Representatives and Senators a few days ago first gave the public an inkling of the Bourbon intrigues having in view the practical abrogation of the supervisor law under the specious guise of a "compromise." By whatever name it is called, the effect of the modifications proposed will be to turn over the country, bound hand and foot, to the tender mercies of the State-rights Democracy. There is no room for doubt that it is in the programme to emasculate the last vestige of every reconstruction measure that stands in the way of bringing the ship of State back to its ante bellum meanings, as soon as possible after the success of this initial movement which formally marks the succession of Democracy to absolute power in both branches of the legislative department of the Government. It has occupied the back seats into which it was driven as a penalty for the traitorous assaults on the life of the nation—nearly two decades. And no one reviewing the record can fail to note the increasing boldness of each successive step taken to restore the Government to the old semi-barbarous attitude it occupied on about every question of public moment that came out of the thirty years of sharp and hostile agitations immediately preceding the first overt act of war. There is every reason to believe that the leaders have been at work for weeks shaping the "compromise"— the really absolute surrender—and the anxiety, even dismay, of leading Republicans, before the incredulity and indifference with which they affect to listen to the boasts of exultant Democracy that the President is already and irreversibly committed to it. The truth may as well be acknowledged. Many Republicans, despite their protestations, and their evident efforts to forget the humiliating surrenders of the past two years, have been unable to divest themselves of the feeling that their cause was in jeopardy, and that in so far as it depended on the verbi-bral uprightness of the Chief Executive, there were grounds for apprehension. The frequent and prolonged visits of the Lamar and Gardner and others of that ilk to the White House recently, could not fail to be noted, and their coincidence with similar conferences immediately preceding the formal adoption of the compensation policy, has had a very disheartening effect in Republican circles. The very atmosphere has been heavy with suggestions of intrigue and possible treachery.

The matter stands in this way this morning:
The Democratic leaders profess to entertain no doubt that the President and a portion of his Cabinet, at least, are fully committed to the policy of non-resistance to the Democratic programme relative to all the disputed points that led to the extra session. While the Republican leaders still pretend to disbelieve, their assertions in that respect lack spirit and are growing less confident with every succeeding development. It is the general tenor of comment that if the President yields as intimated, he will be generally regarded as voluntarily out of the lines of the Republican party, and will be so treated by that side, in both House and Senate.

The committees appointed by the House and Senate Democratic caucuses respectively, to make recommendations as to the order of business to be observed, held a joint meeting Saturday of nearly six hours duration. It was suddenly decided by a vote of 15 to 5 to incorporate in the appropriation bills to be passed, repending clauses, relative to the test oath law, that permitting soldiers at the polls, and the supervisor law. The five negative voters contended that the desired legislation should be a temporary measure, and that the House Committee should be regarded as a decision against the restriction.

On Friday, Harris, of Tenn., introduced the bill providing for an appropriation of $300,000 to give practical effect to the method of Prof.
Gamble for fighting yellow fever and other contagious and infectious diseases.

The political developments of the past two days have served to divert the attention of general politicians to some extent from the Cameron-Oliver breach of promise suit. But the many expose continues to agitate all other circles as nothing before has for many a day.

CUMBERLAND MUTUAL

Fire Insurance Comp ny.

BRIDGETON, N. J.

Conducted on strictly mutual principles, offering a perfectly safe insurance for just what it may cost to pay losses and expenses. The proportion of loss to the amount insured being very small, and expenses much less than usually had, nothing can be offered more favorable to the insured. The cost being about ten cents on the hundred dollars per year to the insured on ordinary risks, and from fifteen to twenty-five cents per year on hazardous properties, which is less than one-third of the lowest rates charged by stock companies, on such risks—the other two-thirds taken by stock companies being a profit accruing to stockholders, or consumed in expenses of the companies.

The guarantee fund of premium notes being now Three Millions of Dollars.

If an assessment had to be made of five per cent. only, twice within the ten years for which the policy is issued. It would yet be cheaper to the members than any other insurance offered. And that large amount of money is saved to the members and kept at home. No assessment having ever been made, being now more than thirty years, that saving would amount to more than

One Million Five Hundred Thousand Dollar

The Losses by Lightning.

Where the property is not set on fire, being less than one cent per year for each member, are paid without extra charge, and extended so as to cover all policies that are issued and outstanding.
