The Husband's Stratagem. BY AMY RANDOUPH,

The sunset had faded into gray, uncertain dusk. It was decidedly too dark to readyet it was not time to call out the brilliant fairies of light that were imprisoned in the gilded tubes of the chaudeliers. And so it happened that the room was yet in darkness, save for the twilight that struggled in through the heavy curtains of smethystine silk, and the ruddy, fitful gleams of the soft coal-fire that danced and sprakled in the grate. For it was late in October, and the autumn frosts were descending on the uplands, and even city homes looked all the brighter for a cheerful fire.

"All alone? and in a brown study, as. I live! I hope I haven't interrupted you,

As if brisk little Dr. Colwell ever interupted anybody ! Does the sunshine interrupt the flowers in the garden? Does an invigorating breeze interrupt the fevered brow on an August morning? We rather think not! And Dr. Colwell was a man decidedly after the order of sunshine and brisk breezes.

"Not at all, doctor-take this arm-

Well, I will," said the dector, depositing himself comfertably in a nest of crimson silk cushions, and finding his hat on an opposite table. "And you shall tell me what makes you look so despondent!"

"Did I look despondent?" Did you? A pretty question to ask an old fellow who has held you on his knee many a time! As if I didn't know every change of your countenance as completely as if it was a printed book! Something is wrong, Mark, so out with it."

" Really, sir," said Mark Clayton, laughing, "I was not aware "Wasn't aware! O, fiddlestick, Mark! Perhaps you're not aware that you are a totally different man from the cheerful, snany-hearted fellow of six months since. Some influence or other has changed you to a pasive, low spirited spooney. Excuse

"Thank you doctor!" said Clayton. "There now was that a genuine laugh& Not a bit of it—only a hysterical cachination that an bonest man ought to be ashamed of. Let me feel your pulse, my boy. Hum-m-ha-a-all right there. Now. then, if you don't speak out I'll-I'll-''

What Dr. Colwell would have done, in that case sever was made known to the world, for just as the words were trembling upon his lips, the door opened, and a beautiful young lady swept into the room, bontreted and shawled, as if for a walk. The old gentleman stated up with a brisk gallantry.

"Mrs. Clayton-and as rosy as a pink. l needn't ask after your health, it seema. "I am very well, thank you, doctor. Dear me, Mark, how very warm the room is! Why haven't you lighted the gas?"

Mr. Clayton obeyed by instantly illuminating the room. His wife threw herself carelessly into a chair. "What's this envelope on the table? Tickets for the opera?"

"Yes. I thought you would like to hear the new prima donna.'

Well, I shouldn't then. The opera always makes my head ache. I wish you ever remembered my likes and dislikes in his birth year we come to 1869. Taking rightly."

"Then " said Clayton, smiling, "I am almost afraid to present this bracelet I bought this morning in remembrance of the day we were engaged to one another, two years since.

"Ob," said Mrs. Clayton, ungraciously, "Turquoises—the very stone of all others that is most unbecoming to me."

"That's a pity, for I have had your initials marked on it, and consequently it can not be exchanged."

"I can't wear the thing, said the wife, pettiably, giving the velvet box a push along the table. "I wish, Mark, you would take your feet off that fender-of all the disagreeable habits men pick up, that is the worst!"

Mr. Clayton removed his feet from their obnoxious position without a word; the old doctor sat observing the couple in si-

"Your handkerchief, dear," said Mark, eaning forward to restore an embroidered cobweb of fine muslin that had slipped from his wife's lap. As Mrs. Clayton took it, she uttered a little impatient sound. "Mark -you have been smoking !"

"Only one cigar, Nina-and that was two hours ago. I did at suppose your olfactory nerves were so delicate y strung." "It is too bad, Mark," fretted Nina Clayton, "when you know how I hate a cigar." "It shall be the last time, puss!" said the husband, caressingly. "Come, sing us some of Dr. Coiwell's favorite Scotch ballads before tea."

"I don't feel like singing," said Nina, petulantly.

"Play something, then."

"I suppose it never occurred to you that I might possibly be tired, after my

I beg your pardon, dear; I did not think of it."

"Of course not; men are privileged to be selfish. By the way, did you get me that new piece of music?"

"Never once thought of it! But I'll be ure and bring it home to-morrow." "You needn't," said Nina, applying the cobweb handkerchief to her eyes. "I don't care for it now!"

"Why, Nina, isn't it just as good tomorrow as to-day?"

Mrs. Clayton made no answer, but left the room shutting the door behind her, with no gentle hand, Mark rose from his seat; with a disturbed countenance, as if to follow her.

"Sit still, Mark," said the doctor, quietly pushing him back into the chair. I've discovered the secret of your changed aspect now!"

"I assure you, doctor, she does not mean

"Yes, yes-I understand! She's simply a spoiled, petulant child, who has unconconsciously fallen into the habit of find ng fault with everything that occurs. But Mark—she makes your life miserable." Clayton's head had fallen upon his hand.

"I can't deny it, doctor-I am miserable; and yet I know that Nina loves me dearly, in spite of all these little irritabilities. O, doctor how happy I should be if she was only the Nina of a year ago.'

The doctor had been adjusting and re adjusting his spectacles, and polishing the glasses thereof, with great energy, for a minute or so. Suddenly he stopped, and fixed his keen, gray eyes on Mark Clayton's

"Shall I tell you how to work the transformation?"

"Do, doctor."

"Then you must promise to adhere to my commands strictly and literally—no halfway obedience." "It shall be implicit!"

'Very well," said the doctor.

Downfell of Napoleon Ill.

Some one, curious in the statistics of itsality, has been making calculations to show that Napoleon III, will o me to his downfall in 1869. The calculations are on some very odd colucidences of dates, which we will try to explain. In the first place, they take the dates of the principal events in the history of Liouis Philippe and his Queen, which they group together so as to sum up 1848, the year of his downfall. Thus Louis Philippe was born in 1773 and ascended the throne in 1830. Now to 1830 add separately the figures 1, 7, 7, 3, of his birth date, and they make 1848, thus: 1830 and 1 and 7 and 7 and 3 makes 1848. The same result is reached if we take the year of his marriage. That event occurred in 1809, and he assended the throne in 1830. Now 1830 and 1 and 8 and 0 and 9 makes 1848. Again if we take the date of the berself, and then all up the besself. Queen's birth, 1782, and go through the same process-1830 and I and 7 and 8 and 2, we arrive at the same fatal year, 1848, in which he lost his throne.

The second part of the calculation is this: Napoleon III, was born in 1808, and ascended the throne in 1852. Now, if we start with 1852, and add the separate figures the date of his ascent to the throne in 1852, we have: 1852 and 1 and 8 and 2 and 0again bringing us to the fatal 1869. He married Eugenie in 1853, and taking the year 1852 and adding the separate figures of his marriage year, and it still points to 1869. Thus 1852 and 1 and 8 and 5 and 3 make 1869. In fact, these French historical dates are full of such curious indications. Robespierre tell in 1794. Taking that date and adding the separate figures of it as above, and we have 1794—and I and 7 and 9 and 4-making the date of Napoleon's full. 1815. Pursuing the same method, we take 1815, and I and 8 and 1 and 5, making 1830, the date of Charles X's fall. Going on to 1848, the date of Louis Philip. pie's downfall, and we find that 1848 and 1 and 8 and 4 and 8 bring us once more to the fatal 1869.

But there is still another fatality attendng these French dynasties, which is put in this form : Seventeen years was the limit of the supremacy of Napoleon I; seventeen years the restored Bourbons reigned; seventeen years Louis Philippe occupied the throne; and the same seventeen years being accorded to Napoleon III, it carries him to the same fatal 1869 as the end of his career. And this fatal seventeen is also produced by strange coincidences. Taking the figures in the year of his birth, 1808, and adding them up thus, 1 and 8 and 0 and 5, and they sum up 17; taking the figures in the year of the Empress' birth, 1826, and adding them, 1 and 8 and 2 and 6, and they also make 17; then taking the figures in the year of his marriage, 1858, and 1 and 8 and 5 and 3, and they likewise make up 17.

These coincidences are extraordinary enough to set the wonder-mongers at work. and some of them see the fingers of fate in all And it not unfrequently happens that such shadowy prophecies set influences in motion that enable them to work out their fulfilment. The Bounpartists are all confirmed fatalists, and these things may cause the present head of the family a great many anxieties about 1869 .- Ledger.

LOOK OUT FOR HIM. - Anexchange raps on the knuckles of a certain class in this thought of a man in business who does not advertise at all? Would our neighbor think there was anything wrong in him? Such a man, at furthest, is not governed by strict business principles, but looks through a glass darkly, and not only robs himself of his fair advantages, but bestows the spoils on his wiser rivals; in a word, he "saves at the spigot and loses at the bung." In the words of Horsce Greeley, to neglect advertising is like resolving never to travel by steam, nor communicate by telegraph—it is to close one's eyes to the light, and insist on being in perpetual darkness. Advertising is already working a revolution in trade, by driving thousands of the casy going out of it, and concentrating business in the hands of a few, who will amply suffice to do the whole, and will soon have to do it, for at this day of light and from—your fathers and mothers. At this knowledge, people's eyes are wide open, remark a bright looking little colored chap and they conclude there is something wrong with the man who has merchandise to diepose of and does not advertise.

In January, 1863, I was brought down again on my bed, and was not expected to live the night out. My husband stayed at my side, and stabt friends, and they all give ma my to die. At this time every one who saw me did not think I would exerteave my bed a living woman. The first night I was attacked with sparms, and was deranged must of the time. A friend, live kalving, came to see me the last of the week, and brought the Sunday Mercury. In it was an account o to the Sinday Mercury. In: it was an account o la great ours performed by Dr. Schenek! She read it to me, and it was so much like my disease that it to me, and it was se much like my disease that I asked my bushand to, go and see him for me. At this time I had given up all hopes of ever getting well again, and made my peace with Lod, to be ready whenever he salled for me.

On the 27th of January, 1845, my husband called on. Dr. Schench, 32 Road street, New York, and stated to him my case, which he did, and examined me with the respirometer. When he was shout to go I asked him if second erro me! His reply was! I cannot, sell, both hungs are diseased, and the profibilish substant Street were lungs enough left to these a ware if the districts could be stopped. He said in order to do this, is would have to give he blendrike Pills in small dose, at first, to darry off the inordid matter, and them, with astringents, he hoped to check it, which he did, but the constant, one hoped to the the west and different and prestrated me so night: sweats, and fourthers had prestrated me so that be was alraid my vital powers were too much prostrated ever to rally, and yet he seemed to think if I could live to get enough Pulmonic Syrup through my system to same expectoration there were large enough left for me to recover.
