HAMMONTON, N. J., SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1915

No. 20

E. S. Grant greeted Hammonton friends on Thursday.

Volunteer Fire Company meets next Monday evening.

A kitchen has been added to the rear of G. F. Lenz's residence.

Parker Treat and wife are enjoying their car with their parents.

L. A. Hoyt, of West Philadelphia, spent a couple of days at his father's.

Mrs. W. J. Vernier is recuperating from several weeks illness, at Atlantic City.

Sewerage assessment complaint meeting next Monday evening, in Bellevue Hall.

Children's Day committees, in the various Sunday Schools, are getting to work.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jones was taken to the German Hospital, Philadelphia, for treatment.

Mrs. Harry Wills and daughter, of Brooklyn, were welcome guests at Jas. P. Patten's.

St. Joseph's Church brick sale is now going on, many desiring not to wait until July 16th.

Miss A. L. Hoyt and Miss May are visiting in West Philadelphia and Lansdowne, Penna.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Perry have moved into the Aitken cottage, opposite Pennsy station.

The Farmers' and Merchants' Building and Loan Association will meet Tuesday evening next.

There will be a meeting of the Fourteenth District, P. O. S. of A., with the local Camp, next Monday evening.

Mrs. Chas. F. Crowell is spending a month or more with her daughter, Mrs. Jas. G. Craig, in Altoona, Penna.

M. Rubba has been making improvements to his property, at Orchard and Horton Streets, and will soon move in.

As we have to notify the Raleigh how many places to reserve at the Board of Trade banquet, all tickets must be paid for to-day. Com.

County Court opened Tuesday, and Hammonton was well represented on the juries. The Grand Jury was in session one day, then adjourned for a month.

Postmaster Langham has made a change in the Post Office which meets with general approval, has added a stamp and parcel window, which will remain open for business all day.

Kate Aylesford, Chapter, D. A. R., will raise a large flag over the graves of Revolutionary soldiers in Pleasant Mills Cemetery, on Memorial Day, May 31st. This flag is to be renewed each year.

Littlefield's horses, attached to the fine new ice wagon, ran away early Tuesday morning. They went down Third Street to Maple, to Central Avenue, and on down to the disposal plant; and but for two telephone poles might have reached Tuckerton. One pole was broken into three pieces, wagon wheels and part of the body were damaged, and the harness reduced to ribbons.

The boys will open their home season to-day, on the High School grounds, with the strong Pleasantville team. This is the first of a series of games, to include Pleasantville, Tuckerton, Vineland and Woodbury and other teams, for the championship of South Jersey. The boys should be helped by a larger attendance. Mayor Hurt will throw out the first ball. Adams will work for the visitors, while either Murphy or Montgomery will work for the home boys.

In a "Peace Centenary Essay" contest, participated in by twenty-three of the local High School students, Flora M. Brown, of Dorothy, was adjudged the winner, and will receive a medal offered by the "Independent,"—a current weekly magazine,—for best essay on "One hundred years of peace between English-speaking peoples." The judges awarded honorable mention to Ernest Brimfield, Ethel Packard, Vale Stockwell, Blossom Palmer, Clifford Wans, and Marion Dunning.

The Daughters of the American Revolution are planning to take the few survivors of our G. A. R. Post to Pleasant Mills on the 31st, to participate in the ceremonies and share in good things provided.

Rev. W. H. Swallow is making good progress toward recovery, in Hahnemann Hospital, where he was operated upon for a form of gathering in the ear. It was a serious case, and friends are glad to know that complete recovery is probable.

Miss Lucie Scranton and Mr. Irving Murphy were married April 28th, 1915, by Rev. W. L. Shaw, at the residence of Mr. Fred Measley. Also, at the same time and place, the same minister officiating, Mr. Wm. Losse and Miss Viola Murphy were united in the holy bonds. Best wishes to all.

The Board of Trade will pull off their first annual banquet on Wednesday evening next, 19th, at the Raleigh. State Commissioner of Education Calvin N. Kendall will be present and speak. The programme also includes selections by their sextette. Tickets, one dollar each, are obtainable by members.

The Frank N. Thomas family had a re-union the past week. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Winkler, Jr., and child, came from Jamaica, intending to remain three months. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thomas and child, from South-Dennis, N. J., and Frank Thomas, Jr., civil engineer at Panama, were present.

The "Class of 1914" gave such a glowing account of their trip to Washington, that arrangements have been made for this year's class to take it in on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, May 27th, 28th, and 29th. The Commencement exercises will take place, as usual, on the last day of school, June 11.

High School Tennis Club

An important meeting of the Hammonton High School Tennis Club will be held on Wednesday afternoon, May 19th, at 3.45, in Miss Weston's class room in the High School Building.

The election of officers, and the question of the erection of a back-stop net, will be brought up.

Every member is urged to be present.

At May's Landing, Saturday, May 8th, was held prize contest in arithmetic, spelling, and pronunciation. Prizes were won by Hammonton pupils, as follows:

Arithmetic. Second Prize, $3, by Saddle Rubba; third, $2, by Alfred Goff; three prizes of one dollar each were awarded to Alexander Hay, Florence Wells, and Walton DePuy.

Spelling. One prize of one dollar to Alexander Hay.

Pronunciation. Four prizes of one dollar each to Walton DePuy, Saddle Rubba, Robert Strouse, and George Wood.

A Fraternal Visit.

Winslow Lodge, No. 40, I. O. O. F., was visited, Wednesday eve'g, by Aaron Lodge, of Atco, accompanied by Rpworth Lodge, from Gibbstown, and Berlin Lodge, from Berlin, for the purpose of presenting Winslow Lodge with a "Traveling Bunch of Sticks," one of the mementoes of the order, which has been touring the state for more than fourteen years,—being passed from one lodge to another from time to time.

Winslow Lodge is one of the oldest in the state, having been instituted May 18, 1846, at Winslow, later being moved to Hammonton after the destruction of the Winslow glass works.

Among those present was Mr. William Bernshouse, the oldest living member of the lodge, who was initiated Aug. 13, 1857. He gave a brief history of the lodge to the present day.

After a very busy and interesting meeting, all enjoyed a substantial lunch, and the visitors departed for their homes with good wishes for the prosperity of good old Winslow Lodge.

Made-to-Order Suits.

For ten years we have been making clothes to order for men.

Some have them made because they are accustomed to it; others think they are hard to fit; and some really are hard to fit with ready-to-wear garments.

Of late years, since we connected ourselves with America's best manufacturers of ready-to-wear clothing, and carry big stocks on hand, to fit all kinds of men, whether stout, slim, tall or short, many of these men now buy ready-to-wear.

We will admit that there is economy and less trouble if you can come in and try on one or two suits, or a dozen. It gives you a chance to see how the garment looks on you, how the style and material of which it is made becomes you.

To the men who cannot be fitted with ready-to-wear clothes, or those who prefer to have them made to order, we say,

Come in, and let us make you your clothes.

We are in a position to give you good service, low price, and all around satisfaction.

We do cleaning, Pressing, Repairing, and also International Cartoon Co., N. Y.

IF there be a rhinoceros in the animal kingdom, the rhinoceros, he has not as yet been discovered, and we hope he never will be.

He is next to the elephant in bulk, but far about him in everything. He is the way of repaisance of looks. In fact, no one can fancy a worse-scaping animal than a rhinoceros, and pondering him of the marches and junctures.

There are four varieties of the rhinoceros found in North Africa, the boorie or black, the hellion or two-horned black species, the common or white, and the black or black rhinoceros. The first two named are smaller than the others; but they are treated more ferociously and dangerous to man than the others.

The Asiatic rhinoceros is smaller, says a more loosely hanging hide, and has a smaller horn.

But all of them have such filthy the body, that a bolt of iron shot would be immediately closed over, and the animal himself frequently bleeds to death inwardly without a drop appearing on the outside.

The rhinoceros has become such an ordinary sight in the menagerie of London, that your routine of the day need know the name of descriptum. It may not be known, however, that he is wonderfully quick to scent or to smell. He will smell a man at a small and a piggin. It must be remembered that they are intended to be so. He will smell a man at a small and a piggin. It must be remembered that they are intended to be so. He will smell a man at a small and a piggin. It must be remembered that they are intended to be so.

It would hardly be supposed that a rhinoceros would be so quick of speed, and yet he is one of the swiftest of quadrupeds. It is no difficult for him to gallop over a plain, and the fastest horse to overtake him that he can find.

The rhinoceros preferring to approach him by stratagem.

The rhinoceros is not afraid of any animal.

If the rhinoceros has patience as much as a lion, he generally will allow even enough to satisfy him a man, and he will allow a horse and other antediluvian.

The lion is equally sagacious, and will allow a man to approach him with the affairs of the ketchee.

There is a curious fact respecting this ungaily monster which must be mentioned, and that is, he is almost invariably attended by a small bird, which gives him warning of its approach.

The little feathered friend is named the Duthera Africans, or, as he is more commonly called, the rhinoceros bird.

It is generally busy hunting for the insects which the rhinoceros catches, and he is very useful in the same, and the instant it catches the water, when the animals suddenly uttered a shout of alarm and trembled from head to foot, seeming to be gathering up their wits, but uncertain which way to leap.

The boy was scarcely less alarmed, and placed around to learn what it all meant.

He saw at once; for, with a furious, grunting snuff, and a noise as if a cannon were being fired, a mammoth, of wood, he caught sight of the mountainous form of a rhinoceros, which was hurtling furiously upon him.

The poor animal, with a look of terror, and, although, somewhat, spitting, and dancing nimbly on his hind feet, did not move from his place.

Fred instantly drew his rifle to his shoulder, and, aiming at a point between the two animals, fired. He saw the enormous beast was no more than twenty feet distant.

It took him a full minute to mark, as a matter of course; but it might as well have been aimed against the head of an ironclad for all the execution it effected.

Never observed the rhinoceros in the snuff, for it is almost impossible to injure a bulk of such dimensions.

At the instant the gun was discharged Colonel Chapman called out to his men, "White he and his companions are retreating." He then, without understanding the nature of the danger, he hurried to Fred to leap from his horse and make a dash toward him and the captain, but in the confusion of the moment, the boy called out, "Retreating and retreating," did not follow his advice.

With the discharge of the weapon, the animals seemed to have concluded what he ought to do, and, wheeling about, he made a plunge up the road, still snuffing with terror.

There was a good horseman and kept his seat.

Knowing the speed of his animal, he was not surprised when he saw the care of both; but that immense bulk which swung so heavily out of the bushes was upon the horse before he could get away.

The prodigious snuff, with its horny blade protruding forward, was shoved back, and the animal, with a snuff, and with an irresistible force—so irresistible, indeed, that the terrified Fred felt the pony actually lift off its feet.

It was a case of "fight or flight." Life! shouted his father again, now so close that the boy heard and obeyed like a Freeing his feet from the stirrups on the rhinoceros—among the dead pony off his horn, Fred made a flying leap to see where he was going to land.

As a consequence he landed on the back of the gentle beast, alighting with a crash and prescrying his upright posture.

The broad, sleeky mass of skin and flesh felt like a Wilton carpet, and it was so soft and yielding that he did not think the rhinoceros would have taken any notice of him.

But the boy did not remain any longer than he was wanted. One or two quick steps, and he went off the animal, landing at the side of the road, up which he sped as if the huge foot were a millstone.

The rhinoceros could have overtaken him without trouble, had he started in pursuit, but he did not seem to notice.

It took a moment or two for him to shake the body of the pony free from his horn, on which he had impaled himself.

The brief while occupied in doing this gave Colonel Chapman and Captain Rove the very opportunity they were waiting for. It was impossible to say how the encounter would have terminated.

The horsemen, having hunted the animal for some time, placed themselves in such a position that they sent their bullets simultaneously into the body back of the fore-leg—probably the most vulnerable point of the rhinoceros.

The trained horses stood their ground bravely, but the instant they saw the animal staggered some twenty yards away, and it was with difficultly that they could be induced to approach anywhere near the bridge. The fugitives, however, were not so daunted, and cautiously approached the huge mass in the road. The chances which it appeared to be doomed often displays a dangerous amount of vitality. In this instance the two well-directed bullets had done their work so effectively that all danger was past.

Michael Chapman shouted to Fred, who was several hundred yards away, to return, and the boy lost no time in doing so. Then the three, as they met, carefully looked over the battle scene.

The loss of the pony was a great one, and caused Fred deep sorrow, but he was thankful that no one of his party was injured.—H. L. Lewis (Herald).

An Englishman who had been for a tour round the world was much annoyed with a report of his return which appeared in a local paper. This report ended:

"His numerous friends are surprised that he is unchanged!"

He did not know that the offender was the compositor, who, in setting up the report, had substituted a letter "c," thus substituting the word "unchanged" for "unbechanged," which the compositor had written.

SIMON SIMPLE: MOSE TURNS THE TABLES

U IS wife was obliged to leave the table and hurry into the kitchen to assist the servant. There was rather an awkward pause when the joint came. Ralph Verbury scanned the guests' faces, wondering whether they were secretly amused. He was not. He was too late. Surely Dorothy need not have reappeared with a flushed face and carrying two vegetable dishes. In Frank's eyes, Dorothy was a little aged quite differently; and Edward South's wife would never have performed such a menial task when visiting.

He was almost sorry now that he had been obliged to invite them in for the evening, and that he had not been able to get away. It was necessary. He was afraid that they were merely comparing his household with theirs, and the thought made him angry.

Frank Verbury was well off, with his flourishing motor business. He was not just an accountant in the city. He had an affair with a young lady from South, too, the artist, must be making quite a lot of money by his pictures. His semi-distant cousin, the artist, must be making quite a lot of money by his pictures. His semi-distant cousin, the artist, must be making quite a lot of money by his pictures.

He envied them both. They had been successful and prosperous, while he seemed likely to earn a small salary for the rest of his days. He coveted, for the moment, the life of a millionaire, and, for convenience, provide elaborate dishes and expensive wines. Yes, certainly they must be laughing up their sleeves at his poor attempt to feed and entertain them.

Yerbury has just bought his wife a new car; and she was answering questions about it. Ralph Milnamay nodded. Mrs. South spoke of a holiday in Switzerland the previous year. He remembered the fortnight at a cheap south-coast resort which had been all he could manage for Dorothy and the hoy.

"Auction bridge—that's the favorite game," Yorbury remarked, as the conversation turned. "D'you play it, South?"

"I don't care for cards," the artist answered. "Does Ralph play it, Mrs. Midmney?" he asked.

"He never goes to his club nowadays," replied Dorothy.

"That's true. I haven't been for months," her husband agreed slowly. These other men, he told himself, had a good time in their different ways. His own life was painfully humdrum.

He glanced at Mrs. South on his right, and then across the table at Mrs. Yerbury. Both were smartly dressed, attractive-looking, handsome; while Dorothy had not even arranged her hair in anything resembling a fashionable style. Beside them she would have been called hopelessly dowdy, and nobody would have guessed she was the youngest of the three.

"Well, what's your husband's latent masterpiece—a portrait?" he asked suddenly, realizing that he had been sitting glum and silent.

"Oh, really," Mrs. South responded. "I can't tell you. Edward's work is quite his own province. As long as he gives me money when I want it—"

She laughed. "I'm like Nora, I dare say."

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Yerbury promptly.

ly. "Frank never expects me to worry him about business details.

Ralph Midway was rather relieved when the meal came to an end, and they withdrew to the small room opposite, where the old-fashioned piano occupied a good deal of space. His wife had disappeared to make coffee; but he persuaded Mrs. South to sing while Mrs. Verbury accompanied brilliantly. Dorothy possessed neither accomplishment, he remembered.

Her conversational powers, too, were limited. Presently the evening dragged. By the time that their visit-

"That went off quite well, Ralph," remarked his wife, closing the hall door.

"You think so?"

"Why, what was wrong?" she inquired—anxiously, disturbed by his tone.

"Oh, everything!" he retorted. "I'm not saying it was your fault. We did the best we could, I suppose. As long as you're so satisfied!"

"I'm sure I didn't notice anything—"

"Just think what a contrast, when we go to South's place, or Yerbury's."

"They know we aren't wealthy, dear. They don't expect eight-course dinners and champagne, or anything of that kind. After all, they please themselves whether they come or not."

"But what about the children, ah! Try to forget how much better they could have dined at home!"

"I'm afraid you're in a discontented mood, Ralph."

"And who wouldn't be? No, no: I'm not going to bed yet."

"You won't sit up too late, dear?"

It must not be said that his response as he pulled an armchair to the fire, left alone he leaned forward, elbows Yerbury and South—they had no cares, and no financial worries. Yerbury was invariably fortunate in his business deals. His fortune must be increasing daily. South hardly ever had to go to the city. He worked in his studio, for short hours. Just when he felt inclined. His was easy employment, with long intervals of pleasure and holidays. Yerbury had a new car. When, asked Ralph Milnamay bitterly, would a car come his way? Why, never, or any other enjoyment or luxury, for the matter of that.

No, he would be obliged to slave on and on, laboring hard for little pay until the end of his existence, with no recreation or change worth mentioning. He had no "gift" like Dorothy's, for painting; no relative to start him as his own master, as Yerbury's father had done.

It was not that he was jealous of their success, but his heart was full of envy. Dorothy's passing reference to the club seemed to him.

"Why shouldn't I, too, occasionally?"

he muttered. "Why shouldn't I spend an evening there? One can't be expected to slap at home night after night! It's unreasonable—ridiculous!"

At his office one of the higher positions had suddenly fallen vacant; and Ralph Mildmay was judged by his fellow-employees to have the best chance of promotion. He considered himself that on the ground both of competence and long service he was likely to be the favored candidate. It seemed only fair.

Another clerk, however, was summoned to the manager's room, and returned with a radiant face. By a effort Midway managed to congratulate him, but inwardly he railed against the injustice of the choice.

"Directly I hear of another opening I—I'll leave!" he muttered to himself thickly.

Other events added to his exasperation.

tion. During that Saturday morning he had to interview one of the firm's clients, a jovial, good-natured merchant, who at the end of their interview held out an envelope.

"By the way, I find I have a couple of theatre stalls which I can't possibly use to-night. I wonder if they're any good to you?"

Ralph Mildmay refused the tickets. He knew that his wife would have liked to go, but she had no suitable gown, while his own dress-suit was shabby, and had not been worn for years.

Then, as he left the office at one o'clock, he caught sight of Frank Yerbury and his wife in their motor. (Probably she had called for him, and they were going "up West" for lunch or for a country trip.

Mildmay thought of them frequently on his homeward journey. It rained as he got out before reaching the city station; there followed a supremely uncomfortable journey in a packed train.

When he reached home, too, the house he had once loved seemed small and dingy, the furniture shabby and poor. Their meal consisted of various dishes re-cooked from what had been

An account awaited him—the quarter's bill from his son's school. He learned that the boy must have a new overcoat.

"I thought of taking him out this afternoon to buy it. You'll come, too, Ralph?"

"Not me!" Mikimay snapped. "You see to it yourself—if you really like tramping about in the wot. I've had enough of that, thanks."

In the evening he called at the nearest postoffice, and telephoned to the club, inquiring for various acquaint-

"No; awfully sorry, Mildmay, but I'm booked for billiards. But let's fix an evening. You must come along and have a hand at cards. Haven't seen you for ages. Some more of the boys'll be here on Monday. Try and turn up then. Right you are!"

On his return Mildmay mentioned the arrangement in a casual way. He wondered how Dorothy would take it, and he was quite prepared for reproaches.

"Ah, I'm glad, Ralph. It'll do you good to join a bachelor party."

He would not admit to himself that a kindly sympathy had prompted his reply.

"She's getting tired of me, I suppose. Glad to get me out of the house."

He reflected resentfully, although he knew that this was not the truth.

"A visitor—on Sunday night!" remarked Mrs. Mildmay, surprisedly, as she rose to answer the knock. "Jane out. I'll go."

It was Edward South who greeted her.

"I've just looked in to see your husband," he explained anxiously. "You think he could spare me five minutes?"

"After a little while she left the two men together. Then the artist awkwardly broached the real object of his call. Ralph Mildmay listened

"You—in want of money? Why, always imagined you were twice as well-off as we are."

"I staked everything on a big picture which has taken me several months to paint. But it's been returned from the exhibition, and I doubt if I shall ever find a buyer. Meanwhile, Mabel and I have always been pretty reckless. We've generally spent every penny I made.. We ought to have a good bit saved; but there it is—we haven't. And now that the emergency has come, we're 'broke.'"

"I've a few dollars put by myself," Dorothy approves—about how much would you want?"

"The landlord's pressing for the rent. It's a good bit overdue. And there's an installment on the furniture."

"You really got it on the installment system?"

"Why, yes. You seem surprised."

"Well, I never dreamed of—of any thing like that in connection with you."

"I dare say," Sarah continued jerkily. "I dare say you wonder why I don't apply to someone else—to Yorbark, for example, to someone more my friend."

"Not a bit," Mildmay rejoined; "up to a limited amount, that is."

The artist thanked him gratefully. When he had gone, Ralph Mildmay sought his wife.

"Fancy them being hard up!"

"You did right, of course, to help them, Ralph."

"I hesitated at first, wondering whether you'd consider."

"Why, I'd never have forgiven you if you'd refused."

He caught his usual train to town.

"Hullo! This is very early for you! And you travel first class as a rule."
"I came on purpose to catch you." Yurby's face was pale and worst. He spoke despondently. "I wanted to confide in somebody."
"Anything wrong?" queried Mil-may, eyeing him.
"Nora and I—we've decided to separate." The voice shook. "She went on."

"I'm very sorry to hear this, Yvonne. It's quite a shock to me!"

"For the last few years we have lived off somehow. I blamed her extravagance, and for always wantto be out at various social affairs. never had any home life. And she used to say—I thought-of-nothing-but-business and money-making. The fact we couldn't agree.

Mildmay patted his arm, not knowing quite what to say.

"Come round and see us whenever you like," he stammered. "Don't stay alone in that big house of yours."

Ralph Mildmay was very quiet as he sat down to his evening meal after telling his wife the latest sensation. These recent discoveries had bewildered him. So both Yorbury and "You're off to the club now, Ralph, aren't you? I hope you'll have a lovely evening. Try and forget all our friend misfortunes and enjoy yourself."

"Yes, it's to-night I'm going."

She helped him on with his overcoat; brushed his hat, and held

"Sorry, Dorothy!" he blurted suddenly over his shoulder. "Sorry!" He began unditching lately. I'm feeling ashamed of myself about it. He ran down the front steps before she could reply.

It was only about half an hour later or when he returned. As he let himself in with his key, the boy at the window caught sight of him, and rushed for him, shouting a shout of welcome.

"Mother said you wouldn't be back till very late!"

"I've changed my mind," answered Midway gently. He saw his wife in that shining-room doorway. "I decided I rather be at home, my dear. I—I'm not "Come along in. There's a nice fire. An Ax he hung up his hat and coat again. Midway nodded slowly to himself. "Good health—my boy—the best wife in the world! What more does a man want to make him happy! Why, I'm the one to be envied. I'm the luckiest of them all, really, only I—I never realized it before!"

A CURIOUS FLY.

A curious lantern fly discovered by naturalists in the Malay archipelago possesses the power of jumping a distance of several feet without opening its wings. It has a projection on its head which, when bent back and suddenly released, throws the insect into the air. This fly was seen to jump from the ground to the roof of a hut.

WHY HE DIDN'T.

In a certain Sunday school teacher was endeavoring to explain to a class of boys that a man could not expect to receive a reward if he never took the trouble to suffer for his fellow men. "But what he does sow he will reap," he continued. "To make mat-

"Turnips!" shouted several.
"Right," said the teacher.
"But it don't always come off."
In one precocious youth, "It did with neighbor Wurzel."
"Indeed!" remarked the teacher.
"Yes," went on the bright scholar.
"He sowed some potatoes a little while ago, but he ain't reaped none."
"Well, perhaps he's gathered them?"
"No, he ain't gathered them!"

"Well, dug them up, then?"
"No, nor dug them up, either."
"Oh, I see," smiled the teacher.
"The potatoes are not ready yet? I will gather them by and by."
"No, I don't think that he will persist the scholar."
"Why?" asked the puzzled teacher.
"Why, you see," responded the other, calmly, "we gathered them when he was in town, the day before he was going to."

UPSET HER VANITY.

It all originated at a small grocery store where they sold everything from sand to a pearl necklace. The farmer had gone for some lintime to rub on his cow's bad leg. The bustling grocer gave the old farmer, however, some scent instead of the lintime.

The day following the farmer came back in a great rage.

"Look here," he said to the grocer. "I wish you'd be careful how you chuck things over that counter. Yesterday I gave me cups 'n' Cologne yesterday."

"I hope it hasn't done her a harm," said the grocer, in a mollifying tone.

"Farm be hanged!" snapped the farmer. "That there cow won't eat now, nor allow herself to be milked. The only thing she does is to stare the whole day long, and go and look at her reflection in the pond."

CRIES OF ANIMALS.

The roar of a lion can be heard farther than the sound of any other living creature. Next comes the cry of a hyena, and then the hoot of the owl. After these the panther and the jackal. The donkey can be heard fifteen times farther than the horse, and the cat ten times farther than the dog. Strange as it may seem, the cry of a hare can be heard farther than that of either the cat or the dog.—S. tinted.

A CURIOUS FLY,

house lantern fly discoids in the Malay archipelago. It has the power of jumping several feet without wings. It has a projectile spittle, when bent back, which, when released, is thrown the length of the body. This fly was seen to jump from the ground to the roof of a house.

ALTHOUGH The Prudential has yet to span one generation, as men reckon time, and the youngest of all the great life insurance companies, it is one of the top leaders among these great companies, and has 2 Billion 600 Million Dollars of Insurance in force.

Progressive management of its business, fair, open-handed dealings with its army of policy-holders, and promptness in paying claims, are some of the things that account for its present greatness.

It would give this Company much pleasure to have you visit the Prudential Exhibit on the Insurance and Public Welfare, Palace of Mines and Metallurgy, Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco.

We regret very much that members of Town Council felt bound by the vote of several years ago, and voted to grant the applications for license to sell liquor. As every enlightened country is forbidding the sale of the booze stuff, and many of our States are taking the same action, for the good of the community we had hoped that our own Council would not be behind the times.

We believe that every tax payer understands the sewer assessment question by this time; or has at least formed his opinion. Come out next Monday evening, and talk it over with the Commissioners; but leave your tempers at home.

We have a copy of the new road laws, which every person using the streets for any purpose should read. It can be seen by any one, at this office.

It is Governor Walter E. Edge for a month—Gov. Fielder having gone to California.

An Appeal to Husbands

You demand

The Best Tools,
the most convenient and most efficient, whether your work be in the office, the shop, or the store; also you seek the greatest economy.

Surely your wife is entitled to equally good equipment in the house.

A GAS RANGE

Reduces the quantity of labor in the kitchen, reduces cost of kitchen labor, and renders the results of kitchen labor more satisfactory to you and to all your family.

Talk it over with your wife; ask your neighbors who now use gas, and then bring her down to our store some day to see the ranges in action. You will feel a lot better to know that she is happy.

Baptist Church, Sunday, May 16.
What is worship? It is the attitude of those who love their Father—God, and who wish to express their gratitude by meeting together in praise and devotional study of God's Word. For this purpose, the Baptist Church opens its doors,—Sunday mornings at 10.30, Sunday evenings at 7.30, and Thursday evenings at 7.45.
This Sunday:

10.30 a.m., theme, "The Fourth Commandment."

Children's talk, "The girl who lost the race, and why?"
11.45, Bible School.

6.30 p.m., Y. P. S. C. E. prayer service.

7.30, theme, "The Life-Giving Word."

Some men are choosing the better part.

In the Presbyterian Church, at 10.30 a.m., the theme will be,
"Who Owns You?"

The Sabbath School Grows: you should grow with it. The Men's Bible Class begins its contest. The losers entertain the winners. Who's who at the picnic in July?

For the progressive young
Christian who wishes to understand:
"Christ,—Both God and Man,"
at 7.30 p.m. Fine music.

Every member an attendant at prayer meeting. Why not? On Thursday, 7.45 p.m.

First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Everett vanDright, Minister.

10.30 a.m., preaching; topic,
"Some Answered Prayers."

12.00 m., Sabbath School.

3.00 p.m., Jr. Epworth League.

7.45, preaching; topic, "Where Heaven Is."

Evening services, until further notice, will commence at 7.45.

Members of the G. A. R., P. O.
S. of A., and P. O. A. will meet at the Camp room at ten o'clock Sunday morning, May 30th, to attend memorial services at the Baptist Church.

Clipping Leaves When Transplanting

Market gardeners who have occasion to transplant many seedlings of lettuce or beets to the open field, especially where irrigation is not available, sometimes experience considerable loss from drying of the young plants. One cause of this may be assigned to weak plants with soft leaves and few roots.
Another frequent cause, according to observers from the New Jersey Experiment Station, is the failure to reduce the leaf surface before setting in the field. Almost always when plants are pulled from the seed bed many roots are lost, and to balance up the water supply and demand in the plant, parts of the top should also be removed. In many cases these tips or even the whole leaves would dry up any way, and the grower may as well keep the water they would have drawn from the plant for the use of stem and new leaves.
