The Other Side of It.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please give me a chance in your columns to defend myself against false accusers. Mr. C. E. Fowler, in his article on "Law and Order," in your last issue, makes the following statement: "One of our prominent citizens has told the Town Marshal that he will ride when and where he pleases." Such a declaration would be unbecoming a good citizen. I take it for granted the above was intended for the writer of this article, as I have otherwise been informed that such a report against me has been going the rounds. I wish to say that I have been misquoted; and further, that the above allegation is absolutely untrue. I have been riding on the sidewalk when the road was impassable, not in the village limits, but in the suburbs of the Town, and for so doing was arrested by the Marshal, on Bellevue Avenue, one-half mile from Third St., and taken before a Justice. The result was, the law miscarried, as it always should under like circumstances.

If the ordinance is to be enforced, as it should be, go about it right. If not, repeal it. Treat all alike, and give everybody an equal chance, and spring no more traps, or defeat may follow.

SELFISHNESS.

If there is any one thing to be deplored, it is selfishness. If there is any one thing to be commended, it is unselfishness. Both are noticeable in our day, and both susceptible of development. There is one place in particular where much of this is seen,—that is, on the cars. We presume that when a passenger buys a ticket for a particular place, that ticket entitles him not only to a passage, but a seat as well; and yet many act on the presumption that it entitles them to two seats, for they occupy one and put their papers, valises, or package in the other, and let later passengers walk up and down, and sometimes go into another car, rather than give them a chance to sit down. If there are but few passengers in the car, such things may be considered admissible; but when otherwise, care should be taken that persons coming into the car have equal privileges with others. I have wondered whether there is not a duty devolving on the conductor in this particular. Oftentimes in street cars, when the seats are filling up, they will find you a place; but on other railroads you are left to look out for yourself, and it is often embarrassing to a lady. Persons of means are entitled to no more privileges in an ordinary car than any other orderly person. If they want special accommodations, there is the parlor car. It has seemed to me that it would be well for railroad managers to specify on the face of each ticket that "this entitles the holder to a passage and a seat," and instruct conductors to see to it that each passenger has what he pays for, rather than allow him to be crowded into the end of the car while on-going souls are napping or gloating over their success in having things their own way.

Let's get rid of selfishness.

MAN'S MASTERPIECE.

Through countless ages on the earth there wrought A race called man, which strove and hoped and dreamed;
And hence there came the man who sang, and those who taught,
And those who whispered of the low redeemed.

And as they came and went they builded
here
A structure marvelous that no man
planned,
A towering temple, rising white and sheer Where sea-planted mountains frown upon the land.

On through its portals, ever moving passed
The generations, adding to its store
Of all that's beautiful, until at last
To those who gazed there seemed no room for more.

But all in peace had this proud palace
grown,
For in its shadow men had warred and
fought;
And, falling there, had seen the glory
down
That, erstwhile gleaming, filled their hearts with pride.

But, ever hopeful, as the ages sped
From out the ages to the race that wrought,
They knew the answer, and, side by side, Carved what they dreamed and wrote
There what they thought.

And so on earth man through the ages
strove
To make this palace nobler to the eye,
And worthy, as the casket of his love,
To tell his glory to the beyond-ye
deeps.

A temple, made for dust-worms, of a race
That came and went, and dreamed and died;
And, crumbling there, shall fall to earth
again,
The masterpiece of man's fall and pride
—Edward S. Van Zile.

And some day lonely on a lonely shore,
The last man sleeping where his fathers
slept,
This wondrous thing that in man's soul
had birth
Shall rise in silence by the moaning
deeps.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

"Don't get lost, little man. I'll watch

Actions by Candle Rules.
Not all boys and girls have attended an auction sale, but most of them have read and heard of how such a sale is conducted, and the "going, going, gone," of an auctioneer is familiar to them through hearsay. But, however much they may have learned of the ordinary methods of auctioneering, it is doubtful if they have ever heard of the old-fashioned sale by "inch of candle."

THE ILLS OF WOMEN

Hard pushed.
No other trials than the earnestness and eloquence of Father Collins, the well-known Methodist preacher, was ever given than that which came from the lips of the famous lawyer, Thomas Corwin, on one occasion.

For a long time he was holding a series of meetings in a town in Ohio, during a session of the court in the place, and many of the lawyers wandered into his meetings, moved, perhaps, more by curiosity than religious feeling. Mr. Corwin was one of these chance listeners to the earnest Methodist, and being asked for his opinion of the preacher, he said it in no measured terms.

"In earnest," said he, in answer to a friend's query, "I should say he was Wily. When he talked awhile he just said, 'Come!' to some of the men standing back where I was, and they marched up in front, as much as to say, 'What do you want to go, or not, sir?'"

"Did you go?" asked his friend, curiously.
"No, I didn't," replied Mr. Corwin, slowly, "but I can tell you something:
he was standing on the edge of the pulpit in the vestry, and he looked right down at me and said, 'Come!' and if I hadn't kept a good hold on that pillar, I should have gone, that 'something' sure!"

And when he better himself the next time he said, "Come! I didn't dare look up to see whether he meant me or somebody else!"

Oh, No!
Blanks—And so you say that Jagdish was drunk last night at the bar garden?
"Blanks—Didn't say anything of the kind. I simply remarked that he covered his cigars with German mustard and tried to smoke a frankfurter."

Memorial Sunday.

Sunday dawned cloudy and threatening, and did give us a slight sprinkle; but it passed off, and the day proved very agreeable for memorial services. The Post, Camp, and Relief Corps were all well represented, and, with their friends, filled the commodious Presbyterian Church. The house was decorated with United States and Cuban flags, bunting, and flowers. The choir and male quartette sang appropriate music, and sang it well. Pastor G. B. Van Dyke preached one of the most masterly memorial sermons it has ever been our privilege to listen to, — taking as his text Paul's words in Romans xiii. 4: "For he is the minister of God, a revealer to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." He paid tribute to the memory of those who gave their all to save our country, made some historical allusions, then came to the present crisis, — saying that in certain cases war becomes a necessity; in the instrument of God to punish nations for persistent evil courses; that when every peaceful effort has been made to right a wrong, then war becomes a holy thing; then a man may rise from the communion table, draw his sword, and do battle for God and humanity. He said that some time ago our Nation discovered, on the road between Jerusalem and Jericho, a weak people that had fallen among thieves, been robbed, beaten, and lay near death. The Priest [Spanish ruler] saw this people's distress, and passed by on the other side; but the Levite [they of their own blood, but in the wrong class], who ought to have given relief, looked on coldly and passed by; then came the Good Samaritan [the United States], of another race, who saw and heard the distress, poured in oil and wine — food and raiment — gave tender aid as was needed. At length it was seen that more than temporary aid must be given, if the sufferer was to recover and escape from those who still threatened him, and to day our Nation is striving, with God's help, to release the afflicted people from their bondage, and punish those whose cruel measures caused the distress. May our God give wisdom to our rulers, stout hearts to our men, speed to our ships, accuracy of aim to our gunners, and success to the cause we have espoused in his name.

We have neither heard nor read so complete and logical a statement of the case as the speaker gave, — leaving no room for doubt, in the mind of any that our cause is just and must prevail. Every loyal heart in that large audience beat more rapidly as his eloquent plea progressed, and we noted more than one who with difficulty restrained his desire to manifest approval.

Memorial Day.

Monday morning also dawned cloudy and misty, seemingly mourning for the thousands of heroes now lying in cemeteries and on battlefields; but as the sun burst through obscuring clouds, one could but realize that the day is soon coming when all graves will yield to the great Conqueror of sin and death.

Daylight was welcomed by the display of bunting and flags all over town, including stores and residences. At Greenwood Cemetery a pole had been erected just behind the statue, and a handsome flag unfurled to the morning breeze.

them on the graves of the dead heroes. A detail was also sent to decorate the graves of brother Sons of Veterans, Carl Moore, C. Edw. Hall, and William Bakely.

Re-forming, the procession marched back to the armory, the organizations going to Third Street and there counter-marching. The Boys' Brigade carried light muskets, which they had just secured through the kindness of Pastor Cross and Capt. Westcott of Atlantic City Brigade.

The day's programme was carried out to the satisfaction of all. Our Band did finely, and gave an out-door concert later in the afternoon, and also in the evening.

Dr. Geo. F. Jahnske died on Monday afternoon, May 30, aged nearly 63 years. Dr. J. was one of the best known men in this section, having resided and practiced his profession here for many years. No one who knew him could realize his advanced age, as he was, up to within a short time, as lively and active as most men of forty years. He was a skillful physician, and had an excellent practice previous to the death of his wife, only a few months ago, since which time he has fallen rapidly in health. Funeral services were held on Wednesday afternoon, at his late residence on Washington Street, Hammonton.
