My love for thee doth much like armed men
 Along the city they would take
 Along the army's front its banners shake;
 Across the mountain's the sun-amt plain
 It steadfast sweeps as sweeps the steadfast rain
 And now the trumpet makes the still air quake
 Echo on echo, echoing loud again,
 And now the thundering cannon doth awake.
 But, lo! the conquest higher than bird had sun
 Instead of answering cannon comes a snail
 White flag: the iron gates are open flung,
 And flowers along the invader's pathway fall.
 The city's conquerors feast their foes among,
 And there the victor's flags are trophies on her wall.
 The victor's flag, the victor's flag.

Fully seventy-five men sat on the grass or stood in groups about the yard, waiting impatiently for the trial to begin. "It was only to be a preliminary trial," said Jess Owens, "but the people, but my sort of hog-stealing case was of great interest to— Buckeye Bridge. Horse-stealing, forgery, bribery, arson might arouse other complaints." The trial was held at Buckeye Bridge were fought over the dead or missing-body of the hog. In the hills north of the valley was much wild timber land, and in the autumn the hunters would find the tracks of certain holes and sinks in their ears and turned them out to eat the acorns. But this was not to be much of a trial; it was a pretty plain case. Jess Owens was the plaintiff, and on the following, and the next day Buck Powell sold it, dressed to a store at Sarvis Point. The ears were left on, and Owens' mark was easily identified. Besides, the hog was found in almost any charge without a witness.

He was one of the class known to the community as "river rats," who lived in a board-shack near the river, and were known to the law as being overworked about every other year. He was a shambling, bilious fellow, with milky eyes that never looked at anything in particular, and a quivering lip that trembled at the least. He knew whether it ought to stay open or shut. Sanguine attacked Buck as readily as summer flies to a run calf.

"I guess they'll sure send Buck up," said a crowd of men as they left the courthouse yard.

"Well, he got the hog all right," said Jess Owens. "It was a good one, too. I'd been feeding it corn for six weeks, and had it just about ready to put down when it was killed when Buck pulled it at the Point."

And he would introduce to prove the ownership of the hog. He had spoken only a few words when he noticed his opponent was about to attack him in the courtroom. He paused, and turned to see what they were watching. The little girl had gripped the edge of the table with both hands and was leaning forward, looking at the man with surprise and wonder in her eyes as if trying to understand "what that had to do with it."

The young attorney, slightly annoyed, lifted his voice to attract the attention of the jury.

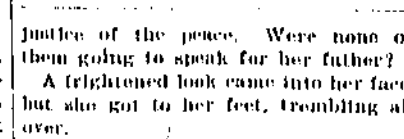

"Your honor, Tuesday morning Jess Owens turned this hog out, and that very evening Buck Powell stole it. There was a slight, sudden movement of the trunk, but the little girl took breath. The girl was on her feet, pulling at her father's arm. She was white, and her eyes were open wide with horror and fear. "Papa, papa!" she whispered, and the room was still enough to hear a pin drop.

But Buck Powell did not look at the child; his head only dropped a little lower, and he shook it stowly. "The trunk bent in the chair, drew a long breath, and once more fixed its eyes on the attorney."

"He killed and dressed the hog before daylight Wednesday morning," the attorney resumed. "This we will prove by his own daughter."

"Oh!" it was a sudden, little cry from the table. The girl's face was burning red and her breath came fast and deep. She had seen the outline of the things he would prove, and sat down, ready for the first witness.

For a moment the little girl looked round the courtroom, wonderingly, expectantly, and then at Billy Houck,

Recent special cable dispatches told how London is going mad in scrambling in stocks of rubber companies, the stuff itself having risen to 100 cents a pound. The regeneration of vulcanized India rubber consists in removing the sulphur which is added in the process of vulcanization.

"FAN" AND THE "ROSTER."

Important Respects in Which the Two Are Quite Wide Apart.

"There's one thing about this football game that I don't like," said the public man, and out on before the season progresses any further," began the mouth-fashed little man with the closely cropped white hair, at exactly 2 o'clock in the grand stand yesterday, "I don't like the revolution of the word 'fan' to refer to the use of the words 'roster' and 'fan' interchangeably."

"I may be wrong," this is nothing more than my opinion-but it is my firm belief that the football fans have been gradually revolutionized as all the games and reads all the accounts in the newspapers after he gets home, in seldom much of a roster. The fan's the regular; the roster's the occasional. The fan, the regular, is at the game, and the roster is as often another attendant in view the distinctly act of the villain in a melodrama. He used to be a roster, but he quit all forms of outward demonstration when he was graduated from the roster to the fan, and he was a blow in the buttocks. If fan that he's any less appreciative, but he's lost all a little in the grand stand to be avowed by the position of the multitude any more fan," mean the man that attend all the times to a strong noise on the dune.

"This play-acted fan says to himself, 'You're out' or 'You're safe!' the moment the ball has been kicked, and he's not the first to get to his feet, down on his knees, but you don't see him getting up on his hind legs and hollering about it and making a spectacle of himself."

"Now, that's the other hand," said the man, "if you attend a ball game every day in the week, and the interval between his climb to the ball park are sufficient to renew his enthusiasm. So he makes a regular fan," mean the man that attend the party of the evening. We couldn't get him without him. But don't let him pour-train me in a regular fan."

The Philistine: If you are not a fan, don't climb, don't be discouraged.

"Fireproof Filamentous Stone, Iron Cloth and Limestone Wool"

The Russian manufacturer fabricates this material from the slag which is obtained from the Siberian mines, which is so to be of so durable a nature that it practically - is indestructible. Harpe Weekly says. The material is soft and can be stretched and pliable in the extreme and which can be used for the purpose in a fire to be made absolutely safe.

"Iron cloth is largely used to-day" tailors everywhere for the purpose making the collars of coats so perfectly. This cloth is manufactured from the slag and has the appearance of iron cloth and is very cheap.

Fiber of Filamentous Stone, Iron Wool and American Wool.

The Russians manufacture a fabric from the fiber of a filamentous stone from the Siberian mines, which is said to be of so durable a nature that it practically is "indestructible," Harper Weekly says. The material is soft to the touch and pliable in the extreme, and when soiled has only to be placed in a fire to be made absolutely clean. Iron cloth is largely used to-day wherever for the purpose of making the coats and suits of steel wool and has the appearance having been woven from horsehair. Wool not the product of sheep is being utilized abroad for the making of men's clothing. The known "linestone wool" is made in an electric furnace. Powdered limestone mixed with certain chemicals, thrown into the furnace and after passing through a furious air-blast is tossed out as fluffy white wool. When it comes from the furnace the cloth dyed and made into lengths like cloth. A pair of trousers or a coat made of this material cannot, it is claimed, be soiled or damaged by grease, and as flexible as cloth made of sheep wool.

An English manufacturer has succeeded in making a fabric from "wools." He obtained a quantity of "wools" from a secret source, and wove it by a secret process into a fabric of rough cloth. The resultant material he dyed a dark brown. A suit or clothes made from this queer stuff were worn by the manufacturer himself, and it is said that he has a large trade in this line in the British colonies.

A novelty in dress material for women is spun-glass cloth, which, it is said, can be in white, green, light pink and deep shade. The inventor of the fabric was an American, and his invention is said to have resulted in the production of a material "as bright and flexible as silk. The first trial to wear a gown of this material was made by a young lady, who was very delicate, slender, pale-skinned, and with pink and its peculiar shade reminded her admirers of the sparkle of diamond dust.

Paper clothes were worn by the Japanese, who, four centuries ago, were the first to make washable, serviceable, and warm, the clothes of cloth. Paper-dressing-gown, bathrobes and similar articles of apparel are now being turned out by Germany in England, France, Germany and other European countries. The paper, wherever they are made is of the "blotting" variety, and after being treated by a new process is dyed in various colors or printed with a prettily floral design.

Even gloves are made of paper-lace, the excellent claim of advantage being that they are susceptible of being cleaned many times.

WOMAN AS A FACTOR FOR GOOD.

Philadelphia Preacher Belonges Pauline Adams, of 425 Third St.

—With the increasing prominence of the cause of woman suffrage, the question of woman's work and woman's influence is being much discussed. It is urged by the advocates of equality for the sexes that the "broader woman's sphere" and "make her a more companion of man," and it is contended with equal positiveness by the opponents of suffrage that it would be to womanly duties.

Of the many interesting sermons preached from Philadelphia pulpits the other day, one by the Rev. Clinton B. Adams, Congregationalist, drew more than passing attention, the subject being "Woman's Sphere." The preacher, after he described woman as the angels of earth, the mothers of men in whatever they undertake and responsible for whatever they do.

"Men have accomplished great things without help from or thought of women. Other men have failed through their very devotion to or their contempt for inferior women. Those, however, are the exceptional cases. Generally woman in the inspiration, the culture and she is a tremendous individuality. Let her fight for all that is noble and beautiful."

In one sentence, the clergyman has encompassed a great truth. He declares that "men are disposed to be without women they have admire in them."

This is profoundly true and in the symphony, indelible music. In the symphony, indelible music is a powerful agent for good or evil.

Their Master's Voice.

This image shows a vertical strip of lined paper, likely a page from a notebook or a document. The paper is white with horizontal blue lines. A dark, possibly black, binding edge is visible on the left side. Two circular punch holes are located near the top of the page. The paper appears to be slightly aged or worn, with some minor discoloration and small dark spots. The overall appearance is that of a standard piece of stationery.

Horses are tired, and then there is the man who has better up and get out into the street. He should go, while we are about it.

A postmaster old shipmaster of New York has been confiding his discomfitment to a reporter. Boys no longer go to sea. He says American merchant lines have the greatest difficulty in getting the right sort of India training up into officers. Public sea education unfits boys for the sea. Present-day eagerness in the pursuit of money makes the youngsters unwilling to follow a calling the reward and perils of which are rewarded the sequel of lifings. But it is a lack of opportunity rather than the loss of a wearing life that is the cause of the trouble. The American flag has swept our merchant ships from the ocean. The small glut of profit on which commerce nowadays conducted has appeared threatened. The cause of the glut of business in which more money can be earned. One can purvey our imports and a much smaller portion of our overseas trade comes American bottom. But given the opportunity, he says, American ships are ready to go. The navy has no trouble that the army in finding crabs. Nevertheless, the collapse of the American merchant marine is a great misfortune. No great national loss. The American flag is not so much wholly in foreign hands; and in a land and low to any country where independent, adventurous and courageous race as that of the deep-sea men declines and disappears. The money makes the youngsters unwilling of restoring American shipping. It may be necessary to wait for changing economic conditions to undo the harm they have already done. But may all hope that the day when our flag again hold the trade of the high seas which it held half a century ago may not long be delayed.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 5, 1916
 CHRIST OUR JUDGE.
 (Matt. 23:21-46. [Conspicuous M.]
 This parable presents a very striking picture of professing disciples of Christ. It is a warning rather a sequel to the text, "Woe unto them that say, We will not be judged of man, for we shall be judged of him, I say," the absolute nature of showing our faith by our works is presented, and our duty is strongly emphasized.
 But there is always a danger of taking the words of truth when often used as the basis for the claim that kindness to others is the only way of saving our souls, and sizing another's soul as the only way of saving our own. This is very misleading, for it does not with the teaching of Jesus at the heart of the Gospel. We must have no right to exclude particular teaching on any subject and apply only the words of Jesus of His ministry Jesus had preached Gospel of salvation by faith substance of religion. It is the only way of saving our souls, and the only way of saving our souls.

Memorial Day visitors at Folcom included Messrs. Rich'd A. Kern, Henry Dexter Learned, Douglas G. Morril, and Karl W. H. Scholz, of the University of Pa.; Miss Lena Schwinck of Phila.; Miss Grace Davis and Miss M. Ethel Chalmers, New York City; Miss Louise Hamer and Allan Lowe, of Germantown; J. D. Townsend, Cape May. All took part in making the occasion memorable, and Mr. Kern's speech was quite extraordinary.

Mr. Albert P. Backus, brother of Rev. Brady Backus, of New York, is on route in his touring car, accompanied by his wife and sister-in-law, Mrs. M. Buck, who are sisters of Mrs. Anson, Greene, of Hammononton. They intend to visit Boston, Washington and other cities, accompanied by Mrs. Greene.

Union Hall contained a fine audience, last Saturday night, at the first annual recital of pupils of the Osgood-Whitten Conservatory of Music. The ladies quartette varied the programme. Every number was enjoyed, and words of approval of the Conservatory, of its faculty, and the progress made by the pupils were heard on all sides.
