EMBALMER

"Murder! Help!"

That is what our Night Marshal, John W. Myers, shouted, about two o'clock last Wednesday morning,--and he meant what he said.

Mr. Myers was making his rounds, walking down Bellevue from Third Street. As he reached the alley between Herbert's store and the REPUBLICAN office, a man sprang out from the darkness and attacked him most viciously. It was entirely unexpected, and in the ensuing tussle both fell, Myers underneath, and the stranger attempted to beat him into submission with some kind of weapon; but the marshal was game, and tried to draw his pistol, seeing which his assailant called for help. Two men ran out of the alley, disarmed Myers, dragged him to his feet, and told him to "Shut up; if you holler we'll kill you!" But holler he did, and they struck him several times on the back of his head with some hard instrument. By this time voices were heard, and the three (all now armed with revolvers, and masked) hustled their prisoner, with blood flowing from his wounds and saturating his garments, through the alley and across lots to Vine Street, where they tied his arms and his wrists and fastened him to a tree,--all the while repeating their threat of death if he made any outcry. The trio then started off hurriedly toward Third Street, and disappeared.

Myers soon found that his left hand was not tightly bound, and by patient manipulation secured his knife and released himself. He hurried toward Bellevue, and seeing Wm. P. Keyser, told him to sound the fire-bell, which he did, and called out a good crowd in about a minute; but by the time the marshal could tell his story, the men had gone, none knew whither.

The whole transaction, so far, had occupied scarcely two minutes. Dr. Lieb dressed Myers' wounds, and no doubt he needed a quiet pillow to ease his headache.

Of course, every man and boy in the crowd turned detective, and in an hour four traps were in the lock-up on suspicion.

Judging that the post-office was the object aimed at, parties searched the premises, and found on a rear window a heavy chisel, and near by a monkey wrench. On Vine Street three rubber coats were picked up. These things had been stolen from the Reading section tool-house and the oil tank house, both having been broken open.

It was a well-laid plan to rob the post-office, no doubt. The tools were to force an entrance, the coats would serve as screens or deaden the sound of explosions. But the man detailed to "do" the watchman met his match, had to call for help, neighbors were roused by the marshal's cries, and the miscreants fled.

Mr. Myers did well, under the circumstances. The streets were dark, the attack unexpected, the odds three to one, and the three armed. Was he scared? Many ask. Well, if not, he is one man in a million; but he kept his head until the danger was past, and did his duty in the face of what seemed imminent death, which he fully expected when they led him off into the back lots. He should be remembered, at least to the value of a first-class revolver.

Thursday morning, five suspects had a hearing, two more having been taken in Wednesday noon. A young man by the name of Hodge (whose sister died on Orchard Street), looked up in the night, was released on Wednesday. None of the group were identified, and all were discharged on condition that they leave the State immediately. They were Lewis J. Schaffer, Harry J. McGintley, Frank Lemmon (colored), and George H. Henderson. Wm. Hassler was held until his record could be looked into.

Several clues are being followed up. If any of the party are caught, much of the credit will belong to Edw. W. Batchelor, member of Council's Law and Order Committee.

THE COMMENCEMENT.

To-day the Presbyterian Church was filled; last Friday evening, June 8th, would be stating it mildly; and doubtless many more would have been present had there been more room. The evening was a model one for the occasion, and consequently the graduates were in a condition to do their very best.

The decorations were very pretty, originality being manifested on the part of the committee. It would be difficult to tell who deserved the highest honor on the evening programme, for from invocation to benediction the audience was seen to be pleased. Of course, some were more interested in certain topics and speakers than others, which would account for any possible diversity of opinion.

The subjects were well chosen and skillfully handled. "Mirth was not an unknown feature. Mary Louise Rogers, May Day, Lottie Louisa Rogers, The Heroes and Heroines of Childhood, Amy Eldridge Joslyn, Fearing in Hammononton, Fretless Myrick, Notable Inventions in Human Progress.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

As in their custom, our Sunday Schools will observe Children's Day to-morrow, either during the evening. If weather permits, one may see many happy children, flowers in abundance, and song birds, and be entertained by the voices of the young folks.

The Methodist will render a program in the morning, which includes a flower drill by eight young ladies. A special feature will be the Primary exercises, in which four very little girls have a cute part.

In the evening, the Baptists will hold their exercises at eight o'clock. Their program, "Garden of Flowers and Song," is rightly named, and includes two chess exercises—one of seven girls, and the other eleven young ladies. The Primary, as usual, will be one of the leading features.

Exercises will be held in the Presbyterian Church in the morning. Judging by the title of their program, "The Son of Righteousness: The Light of the World," it will be an interesting one.

A "Children's Concert" will be held in the Universalist Church at 7.45 p.m. An enjoyable time is promised to all, especially to the little folks.

It was amusing, on Wednesday, after the hold-up, to hear of the many scores of townspeople (especially the gentler sex) who have had. Among the crimes charged against the horrible looking miscreant were,—peeking under window curtains, trying doors, climbing onto eaves roof, and hiding in bushes. Probably he had four legs, and went by the name of "Tom."

PRICE of Egg Plants cut in two. One dollar a hundred for large plants. Also have Tomato, Pepper, Sweet Potato, and Cabbage Plants for sale. J. C. WELLS & SON.

We had a grand display of colonial pyrotechnics last Monday night. Lightning flashes succeeded one another so closely that the resulting thunder seemed one constant roar, and the illumination was almost continuous.

As the clouds drew nearer, the flashes became more vivid, and the reverberations heavier, until rain began to fall in torrents. It was a grand storm.

A little after nine o'clock on Thursday morning, one of J. S. Mart's horses started to run away, with Joe's little boy in the wagon. The owner was near by, and as the team dashed into the alley adjoining this office, he grasped the horse and hung on. After being dragged, thrown under and over and between the wheels and brick wall, he succeeded in stopping the horse.

The boy was uninjured, but his father bears numerous bruises and is minus part of a shirt.

It has been suggested that as something must be done on the tramp question, the Town procure shackles and put all such individuals to work on the highways. No hobo should be allowed on our streets after sundown. Add another night marshal, and lock up all suspicious characters.

LESTER PIANO

The rich mellow tone of the Lester has been a matter of development.

It is the result of years of study and research.
Its unequalled volume;

its unrivaled richness; its superior singing quality, are possible only because every detrired part of the instrument is perfectly made and correctly and scientifically adjusted.
