A word to Farmers.

The Hay crop in this section will be very short. Hay is now scarce and high, and is slowly but steadily becoming scarcer and higher. It would therefore be wise for every farmer to try to raise hay of some sort sufficient for his own use.

COW PEAS

can be sowed up to July 10, at least, for a hay crop, and some people sow them as late as the middle of July. Cow peas are rich in feeding material, can be raised on poor soil, and impoverish the soil less than any other similar crop. Then, the seed is not expensive.

The Story of Life.

Say, what is life? 'Tis to be born;
A hapless babe, to greet the light
With a sharp wall, as if the morn
Foretold a cloudy noon and night;
To weep, to sleep and weep again,
With sunny smiles between, and then?
Ah! then apace the infant grows
To be a laughing, sprightly boy,
Happy despite his little woes,
Were he but conscious of his joy;
To be, in short, from two to ten,
A merry, merry child, and then?
And then, in coat and trousers clad,
To learn to say the Decalogue,
And break it, an unthinking lad,
With mirth and mischief all agog;
A trust off by field and fen
To capture butterflies, and then?
And then, increased in strength and size,
To be, anon, a youth full grown;
A hero in his mother's eyes,
A young Apollo in his own;
To imitate the ways of men
In fashionable sines, and then?
And then, at last, to be a man;
To fall in love, to woo and wed;
With seething brain to scheme and plan
To gather gold, or toil for bread;
To sue for fame with tongue or pen,
And gain or lose the prize, and then?
And then in gray and wrinkled old
To mourn the speed of life's decline;
To praise the scenes his youth beheld,
And dwell in memory of long years;
To dream awhile with darkened ken,
Then drop into his grave,—and then?
—John G. Saxe.

Musings of an Old Resident.

TRENTON, June 10, 1899
MR. EDITOR:—I love to steal away from the routine of business cares, and spend one week annually in your beautiful town, for twenty-eight years the home of my middle life. My interest in its people and their prosperity will never be lost. There are many associations, both pleasant and painful, that crowd in upon me. I miss many familiar faces and forms, with whom I mingled, socially, fraternally, and in a business way; and those heaven departed loved ones,—whose forms have passed from sight, and are giving back to nature's crucible the elements borrowed therefrom.

In accordance with the custom of visiting the graves of departed fallen ones, in an especial manner, on Memorial Day,—a custom inaugurated by the G. A. R. in memory of their fallen comrades, it has been my privilege to witness many of these services; but last year's and this interested me the most,—the assembling of the G. A. R., the Juniors and Ladies' auxiliaries joining in the service, always ready to do their part of sacrifice and service in every good cause,—to walk side by side with man; to encourage by their aid and perseverance. The young cadets, in their new uniforms and white caps, made an imposing appearance; together with the subdued strains of the Hammonton Band, who play remarkably well considering their small amount of practice.

This service, while interesting to the general public, is sad, as well, to the widows and orphans of those heroes.
This service of decoration has extended and become almost universal. To this shrine of love and devotion I come as a pilgrim to pay my tribute of respect to the memory of the past generation.
May this observance continue to grow until there shall be no neglected ones, and as now, the choicest flowers placed over them. Its tendency is to enlarge the affectional nature, to strengthen family ties, and set an example to future generations to remember those who have gone before, who sleep side by side in the same peaceful enclosure,
—the silent dream over.

I come as a pilgrim to this Mecca of civilization alone,—the last link in the chain of my once numerous ancestry, having outlived them all. I come to visit and commune with old friends; and I have met or called upon nearly all, both in the village and suburbs; and with my more especial friends have spent many pleasant hours. I took up my abode, the past two seasons, with Mrs. B. Warrington, a veritable mother in Israel, always at her post of duty.

Hammonton, with its thousands of acres of small fruit, engaging the attention of a large portion of its citizens; demanding also a large influx of foreign elements, mainly Italians, to assist in gathering the immense harvests. The means earned by these aliens has enabled many of them to become landed proprietors, and the native population is endeavoring to decide as to which has come the greatest benefit, the employer or the employed, and which will eventually be owners of the soil. It has certainly been a big task to amalgamate and blend this element into American citizenship. Judging by their financial success, and by the vast throng of well behaved men, women and children that I saw in Greenmount Cemetery, the job appears to be well done.

Hammonton is gradually improving, but many are waiting for a boom. The only drawback is the want of more industries, to give stability to the town and employment to those who prefer mechanical labor.

I cannot refrain from speaking of the "little church around the corner," presided over by Rev. Mr. Yates. I learn from many who heard him on Sunday, May 28, that he spoke very acceptably to the G. A. R. I heard him June 4.
Although educated an Episcopalian and still using the cassock and part of that service of common prayer, yet in his oral prayer, and his sermon, he rises infinitely above all creedal observances, to the sublimity of an interior growth, highly spiritual, and profoundly religious in its true sense.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that, too, by a lady in this country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her, and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and her death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recover, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night; and with two bottles has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. O. Hamick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Trial bottles free at Dr.
Crowell's drug store. Regular size 50 c.
and $1. Every bottle guaranteed.

Educational Convention.

For the National Educational Convention, to be held at Los Angeles, Cal., July 11 to 14, the Penna. Railroad Co.
will sell excursion tickets via direct routes from points along its line, to Los Angeles and return, at rate of single fare for the round trip, plus $3 membership fee. These tickets will be sold good going June 24th to July 7th, and when stamped by Joint Agent at Los Angeles, good to return, arriving at final destination, until Sept. 5. For further information apply to ticket agents.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1899

There was a stranger on the street, Wednesday, in a very mellow condition. He said to some one: "I'm all right, ain't I? I came here with the intention of getting drunk, and I got drunk; ain't that right?" Well, he probably paid for the stuff, and the business is legalized in Hammonton. Who will say him nay?

The great success of the first series of prize pictures has caused the publishers of the Philadelphia "Sunday Press" to announce another competition, in which prizes amounting to $500 will be given to the successful boys and girls. There are over 100 prizes, and any boy or girl can compete. The contest will begin next Sunday, June 18. Everyone interested should get the Press at that date.

The sixty-minute train has been placed in service between Philadelphia and Atlantic City by the Philadelphia & Reading Route and the train service generally increased to Atlantic City, Cape May, Ocean City and Sea Isle City. With new terminals at the foot of Chestnut Street and South Street, and with six stations at Atlantic City, the Philadelphia & Reading offers extraordinary facilities for summer travel to the Ocean resorts. Its locomotives burn hard coal, thus avoiding smoke. Its double track to Atlantic City is protected with high signals, and balanced with anthracite cinders. For rates on commutation and other tickets or copy of "Pleasant Places" on the Philadelphia & Reading Railway, address Edson J. Weeks, General Passenger Agent, Philadelphia.

On May 12th, occurred a collision on P. & R. R. at Exeter, Pa., when twenty-eight persons were killed and many injured. Among the slain were six who held policies of life insurance in the Prudential. The company immediately paid the claims. The Prudential has a record in this respect of which the officers are proud. Prompt payment is of incalculable benefit to the family of deceased, because the urgent need of money is in most cases felt immediately after the death has occurred.

Tuesday.—Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.—1 John iii. 9.

Wednesday.—If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James i. 5.

Thursday.—Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; so shall thy poverty come as one that traveleth; and thy want as an armed man.—Prov. xiii. 34.

Friday.—Through God we shall do valiantly; for he is that shall tread down our enemies.—Ps. cxviii. 13.

Saturday.—Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.—Eccl. xii. 13.

AUGUST FLOWER.

"It is a surprising fact," says Prof. Hutton, "that in my travels in all parts of the world, for the last ten years, I have met more people having used Green's August Flower than any other remedy for dyspepsia, indigestion, liver and stomach, and for constipation. I find for tourists and seamen, or for persons filling office positions, where headaches and general bad feelings from irregular habits exist, that Green's August Flower is a grand remedy. It does not injure the system by frequent use, and is excellent for sour stomachs and indigestion." Sample bottles free at Crowell's Pharmacy. Sold by dealers in all civilized countries.

Children's Day was observed by the Baptist Sunday School last Sunday morning. The church was decorated with bouquets and growing plants, and a sweet singing bird added his music to the occasion. There was special music by the school, recitations, concert and responsive readings, and an address by Pastor Athey. The Presbyterian Sunday School exercises were held in the evening, with music, recitations, etc.

The Primary Department especially pleased the audience with their singing. A quota were a highly used in the decorations.

Letter with the A. H. Phillips Co., 1315 Atlantic Ave., Atlantic City.

Mr. N. C. Holdridge, Principal of the Hammonton public schools, was seriously injured Monday, by being thrown from his bicycle. About ten o'clock he started for Haddon Heights, intending to visit Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rogers, and the following morning he fell from his bicycle. As he was as can be learned, when near Magnolia, the front forks of his bicycle broke, precipitating him to the ground. Mr. H. does not know this, it happened so suddenly, but later found himself lying on the porch of some one's residence, with persons bathing his face. When sufficiently conscious to answer questions, he gave his name and residence, and the name of a friend in Magnolia, who was sent for, and with a physician, did what they could for him; later taking him to the train en route for home. Mr. Holdridge was in the car, fortunately, and telegraphed to Dr. Crowell, who met the train at Hammonton and took his patient home in a carriage. Careful examination showed that he had broken the bone just under his left eye (a very rare fracture), and severely bruised his left shoulder. Happily, no further injury was discovered, but the shock and wrenching caused intense pain, which only care and time will relieve. We are pleased to know that he is on the way to recovery, being able to move about his room on Thursday. Mr. H. is known to nearly every adult and child in Hammonton, and is respected by each. If the popular wish would heal him, he'd not suffer another pang.

Hammonton Council, No. 43, J. O. U. A. M., gave a very pleasant social in their meeting room on the 26th ult., the Council's tenth anniversary. Among the many pleasant things was a substantial lunch,—sandwiches, coffee, cakes and ice cream. Ed. A. Cordery brought his gramophone, and gave us some excellent solos and other selections. Mr. Bond with his violin, and Mr. Scull at the piano, made the evening pass away all too rapidly. While the boys were indulging in a few social games, Mr. John Brown, a railroad man, slipped out quietly and brought in some good cigars, in honor of a fine boy that he has "adopted" into his family, thinking to make of him, some day, a railroad magnate, perhaps.

An extensive berry grower seems to question whether the late drought was not a blessing in disguise,—so far as the strawberry crop is concerned. He says that the price was about four cents per quart when Hammonton began to ship; that had the crop been all that was promised, growers would have ceased picking in a few days, because shipments would not pay expenses. As it was, the few who had berries on low ground, hence not badly affected, received good prices and those not entirely dried up are now selling at from seven to ten cents. Of course, other crops suffered, but will mostly rally under favorable conditions of weather.

Universalist Church to-morrow. Mr. Yates' duties as chairman of the committee on ordination in the Convention of Liberal Churches of Ontario, necessitates his absence. The convention meets at Oshawa, Ontario, and Mr. Yates delivers the Occasional Sermon, his theme being "The Rebirth of the Church." Sunday School as usual, at 12 o'clock. Y. P. C. U. at 7:30, led by Dr. H. E. Bowles.

Mr. L. Myrick had a patch of fine strawberries, and desiring to save the crop, he drove a well attached horse pump, and ran it by steam power, using G. W. Ely's portable engine, and irrigated the field. It would have proved a valuable investment, had not rain come a day or so after his pump was in working order. But he has shown what can be done.

It was a pretty (?) sight,—inspiring to the young,—calculated to impress a visiting stinger; but one of the things one must expect to see in a license town. We mean that group of men under a tree near the Reading freight station, playing cards and drinking beer from a common receptacle.

We have received a copy of the "Fish and Game Laws of New Jersey," as in effect May, 1899. We presume any interested person can obtain the same by writing to any one of the commissioners. Our copy can be consulted by any one who desires to do so.

THE DREADED HOUR

There comes a day—God grant 'tis far away!
When one of us must go and one must stay.
When, face to face, to me no face appears,
One with eyes closed, and the other's blind with tears.
When one, the other's form forever hid,
Must hear the earth fall on the cold-lid.
When one must turn away, with anguished moan,
And wander through the rest of life alone,
And feel, in agony of dumb despair,
Where'er he goes, the loved one is not there;
While yet each joy and sorrow and regret
That once we knew we never can forget.
We know not whether 'twill be you or I
That shall be called to go the first day.
We only know, whichever it be, dear wife,
Must from the living take the best of life—

A Man's Destiny.

667 HAD anything to tell you," said Richard Thorpe, when the departure of her other callers and left him alone with his hostess.
"I thought there was something funny about," said Mrs. Vassar, shading the drooping from her face with a screen of baroque grained, while Thorpe stared straight into the glow and bit at the straw-colored mustache, and out with it, encouraged Mrs. Vassar, with a gleam of kindly amusement in her eyes.
"Well," said Richard Thorpe, plainly pulling himself together, "it's come at last. I'm in for a long haul."
"You're for a ship?" he repeated after her slowly.
"My dear boy, I'm so glad," leaning forward a little in her armchair. "I knew you would be," he said, smiling slightly, without raising his eyes.
"Of course I am. It is one of Doctor's." "Yes, same line." She watched him curiously in the silence that followed. They had been staunch friends, these two, as boy and girl, twenty years ago, and though he went to sea, and she married Tom Vassar, they remained the same. "You don't seem extravagantly elated, yourself," she hazarded presently.
"Don't I?" he answered almost, giving his big shoulders a hitch in a sudden endeavor to restrain his thoughts. "No, yes don't," sharply. "What is it? Kindly."
"Well, fact is, the new berth on the Sydney and Vancouver trip. The other side of the world, you know," he explained.
"Of course I know. I need not be a sailor man with gold embroidery on my hat to know that."
Thorpe laughed at the characteristic laughter, and her face brightened in sympathy with his.
"But we won't lose you altogether?" the quizzical bristled. "Of course it would be much nicer if it were on the home trip, but I'll see you sometimes, won't we?"
"Oh, yes," hastily.
She shot a searching glance at him from behind her fingers, and leaned her chin against the edge of the table, watching him as he went.
"Of course, you're awfully glad of the step," she said, after a pause, and listened intently for his answer.
"Yes, awfully," he replied.
The response seemed satisfactory, and requiring a little cogitation before the next remark.
"Ah, well," she went on, leaning forward a little in her chair, and catching him in the window to watch him. "I shall lose a friend! You are sure to marry some one now you are in a position to do it."
"I shall marry nobody," said Thorpe, decidedly, laying his cap on a table beside him, and Mrs. Vassar smiled triumphantly to herself as she heard, and watched the stubborn lines come about his mouth.
"Dear old singleton," she thought, "he thinks he's betraying nothing."
Then came a silence, while Thorpe began to bite moodily at his mustache once more, and while Mrs. Vassar, who had looked on with troubled sympathy in her bright eyes.
"Hick," he said suddenly, "tell me all about it. Who is she?"
"About what?" he asked, looking quickly. "There isn't any how on earth did you know?"
"You guess, you've been telling me for the last ten minutes."
"I didn't say you had anything; all the same, you have been telling me. Go on now, I want to help you."
Her voice trembled as she spoke, and she stretched out a hand to him. He caught it for a moment, while a look of perfect trust passed between them.
"Well, you see," he began awkwardly, looking into the fire once more, "I happen to know it was all her doing."
"What was?"
"The Vancouver business."
"To explain a little."
"It was all about the ship, that she had offered me the ship, that she had suggested it to him."

"She? Who?"

"His daughter—Cecily, you know."
"Of course I know—she hasn't another. What? In astonishment, she said to Thorpe, "Don't you see? She has got me out of the country altogether."
"Nice, gracious spirit to take things in, upon my word," commented his friend, with a smile of a smile. "Might I ask what put that idea into your head?"
"Oh, there's another chap—chap with a title and money and things," vaguely. "Handsome chap, too," indignantly. "Did you make love to her?"
"No."
"Then what makes you?"
"She saw it coming, I suppose, I looked it."
There was a pause, during which they both looked into the glowing coals. "Did you even make love—really—to a woman?" Mrs. Vassar asked curiously.
"No," answered Thorpe, with a shake of his head; and Mrs. Vassar gave a little nod that said plainly, "I thought so!"
"And don't you think you are jumping to conclusions rather?" she asked.
"No," Thorpe answered, shaking his head again, "he's a much more likely fellow to please her than I am, and I would avoid complications to keep me out of the way," he added bitterly. "Her father would quite possibly take my part."
"I think you are making her out as acting in an abominable manner," said Mrs. Vassar, with spirit. "I don't think so at all," he rejoined quickly. "I dare say she's a little sorry for me, and besides she's procured me my captain's ship—hang it! All the pleasure's taken out of it."
There was a long silence after this that was only broken at length by Mrs. Vassar's rising suddenly and saying: "Away with you, now; I must go and dress. Come and see me to-morrow at half-past five, a quarter to six. Don't forget."
"I won't forget," said Thorpe, shaking hands, and going to the door.
"By the way, what's the other man's name?" she asked, as the friend's big figure was disappearing.
"Toler," he answered, turning round; he's a very decent fellow. I perfectly understand her—anyone preferring to—"
"Yes, good-by. But that's more than I do," she said aloud to herself as the door shut. "Dear old Dick's worth ten of him any day. Wait a while, my dear, I shall manage it."
As she went upstairs she met her husband.
"What, not dressed yet?" he asked as he kissed her. "What have you been at?"
"Thinking how I can make two people happy as we are," she answered. "That's a big undertaking," said Tom Vassar gravely.
The next day Thorpe presented him to his hostess, and asked for Mrs. Vassar. He was shown upstairs immediately and greeted by the lady he sought, who crossed the room to meet him in a marvelous tea gown.
"You may shake my little finger," she said, holding it out to him, "the others have been eating buttered toast at least, not exactly, but—you know what I mean."
"Perfectly," Thorpe laughed, shaking the delicate finger between his strong finger and thumb.
"There are chairs to be had if you look hard enough for them," Mrs. Vassar said, upon peering round in the fire, and then took that filled the room.
"Lots, thanks," said Thorpe, seating himself.
"Not that! It won't bear your big weight. Sit that fire up, Cecily, until I look for something made of iron."
A girl's figure bent forward at the far end of the room and stirred the coals into a bright blaze; and Thorpe, who had jumped at the name, made a movement toward the door with a muttered excuse.
"Don't be afraid; it's too late now," said his hostess in a whisper, which brought him to his senses. "Ah, that's the thing," she went on aloud, pointing to a chair, and then she immediately opposite to the fire and looking the way toward it. "That's the worst of the modern drawing room, she continued, while Thorpe bowed to Miss Donalson and sat down. "If you have anything really comfortable it's sure not to be decent enough to put in it, and one never seriously thinks of buying anything for it but old-fashioned, carefully-legged chairs of stiff-necked generations long since."
"I'm very comfortable," volunteered Thorpe.
"So am I," put in Cecily, with a laugh. "I'm delighted to hear it," said Mrs. Vassar, as if she had not been rumbling on merely to guard against an awkward pause that had loomed ahead; but I really think we have the three oldest chairs in the house. Sugar and cream? Of course I remember."
Thorpe drank his tea between the two women, who were anywhere else, yet knowing he would rather be alone, and while they talked across him. Presently Mrs. Vassar turned to him and said, in her sweetest manner:
"What a good opportunity of thank! Miss Donalson for putting that kindly speech in your words! By the way, we must call you 'Captain' Thorpe now, I suppose?"

Down went Thorpe's teaspoon with a clatter, and one foot shot out in an effective impulse of kick his hostess's chair, to stand on her duty too, or anything that was his own. And the same time a suppressed little "Oh" came from the other side of the fire. Mrs. Vassar, however, apparently saw or heard nothing, and her next move was to turn to her husband, for standing up with a remark on the shortening evenings, she lit the gas bracket at her end of the chimney piece, and then, crossing in front of him, lit the other. Thorpe felt his face was crimson, and with his eyes on the clock, cast about for words in which to couch an apology or an explanation; but before he could think of anything at all, the same voice had said more sweetly than ever:

"A thousand pardons, Cecily; you must let Dick entertain you for a minute. I heard Thorpe's voice downstairs, and I positively must see him about something!"
There was a frown of silk, and she was gone, without even looking back to see if the two appealing glances that followed in her wake.
The two left alone, examined the interior of the fire with an intensely voracious of a lotter devotion. It began to dawn upon them that the whole thing was planned and he got something of oblivion to the position for a moment by forthwith giving his whole energy to the silent apostrophizing of the glowing coals—especially Mrs. Vassar. But the present asserted itself again directly, and he cleared his throat to begin: "Of course, I'll say I adore the Pacific trip," he said to himself.
"Mrs. Vassar's—a remark just now," he began, "requires perhaps a little—a explanation. What—I had mentioned to her—a about—you-I mentioned her only I hope you will understand the—and did so—(he rubbed she'd say something—anything)—under peculiar circumstances."
"Very, I should think," the girl remained, coldly, with her head bowed, and her hands crossed, "I have no objection to the whole knowing one of my many suggestions to papa."
"Quite so," said Thorpe, "I agreed Thorpe, losing his head.
"Then why apologize?"
"Why, indeed? But you will let me thank you, since I owe to—a chance suggestion of yours my position."
"Well, I ought to congratulate myself."
A silence while he leaned forward to trace an imaginary pattern with the toe of his boot, and she tied a ridiculous little lacekerchief to her hand. Thorpe wished that Mrs. Vassar would return.
"The transatlantic trip will be quite a pleasant change," he said with a barren enthusiasm, because he felt the strain of silence growing too great to be borne. "Pacific? Are you?"
"Yes, my boat is one of the Sydney and Vancouver, you know."
"He was shown upstairs immediately and greeted by the lady he sought, who crossed the room to meet him in a marvelous tea gown.

There's a boat that leaves at half-past six

For the bay port of Play,
And it reaches the haven of Slumberland
Before the close of day.

It carries the tiniest passengers,
And it rocks so gently, oh!
When the wee ones tuck in their berths,
And the boatman leans to row!

The white sails so low and sweet
(Like a mother's lullaby)
That the travelers smile and close their eyes,
To dream of angels high.

Sometimes the travelers tarry too long
In the busy port of Play,
And the anxious boatman coaxes and calls,
And grieves at their delay.

But they come at last to the rocking boat,
Which bears them down the stream,
And drifts them to the Slumberland,
To rest and sleep and dream.

The name of the boat is Rock-a-bye,
And it's guided by mother's hand,
For she is the patient boatman, dear,
Who takes you to Slumberland.

Now what is the fare a traveler pays,
When he boards the boat of sleep?
For it's only a good-night kiss:
—Little Men and Women.

A Picnic in Japan

A picnic in Japan is a treat that does not fall in the way of many Americans; but it was not strange that the children of an American consul general at Yokohama should have been invited to attend one; nor, perhaps, that it should be described in the St. Nicholas. One of its loveliest incidents was the appearance of a troupe of roving neobabits, who played themselves close by, and promptly began their performance. It consisted of four boy-tumbler, more fat babies, whose bones were evidently of India-rubber. It was considered an honor to have the children of the consul general invited to attend one; nor, perhaps, that it should be described in the St. Nicholas.
