OUR WORK.

"For God and home and native land," is the hymn and motto of the W. C. T. U. It is the work the leaders of our Union are engaged in. Started out in the crusade against the rum evil, it has spread and widened until it takes into its work the reform of all evil. What the W. C. T. U. of our own land has done and is doing in this country, the world's W. C. T. U. are doing all over the world,—their motto "For God and home and native land."

If each Christian woman in this land can reform, with God's help, one drunkard, or lead one erring woman into the right path, yea even to the cross of Christ, how many would rejoice. If the saving of one soul makes joy in Heaven, as well as here, why do we hold back? Let us all use our opportunities, no matter in what shape they come. Let us do all we can to save, to do good to our brother man, to our sister woman, whether young or old. Many are the pitfalls which beset them in life's pathway. If we can draw them away from the paths of danger, and lead them into safety, we are doing something for God, for Christ the Saviour of mankind. PRESS SUPT.

Boysen Years in Bed.

"Will wonders never cease?" inquired the friends of Mrs. B. Pease, of Lawrence, Kan. They knew she had been unable to leave her bed in seven years on account of kidney and liver trouble, nervous prostration and general debility; but "three bottles of Electric Bitters enabled me to walk," she writes, "and in three months I felt like a new person." Women suffering from headache, backache, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, fainting and dizzy spells will find it a priceless blessing. Try it. Satisfaction is guaranteed. Only 50 cts. at Crowell's drug store.

This paper, one year, for only $1.00.

Base-Ball.

The home boys came off victors in last Saturday's game against their old rivals, the Belmonts, after an exciting contest, which was undecided until the last man was retired in ninth inning.

The cricketers did not bring as large a following as usual, but were just as enthusiastic and confident of victory. Few of the old faces were noticed,—Whitey Bousall and Pitts being the only members of last year's team to play. Neither of them played as clever as usual.

Our boys played a snappy game from start to finish, and showed improvement over previous games, there being better team work, and some well placed bunts by P. Jefferson and Setley, which figured in the scoring.

Pitcher Black, who won a game for us last summer, and who tried hard to stem the tide of defeat at Pleasantville, on Decoration Day, was in the box for the visitors, and pitched a fair game. Mr. Black claimed to be familiar with our every weakness, and spoke freely of "doing things" to our batters. In fact, most of the trip from Philadelphia was spent in drilling the Belmont boys as to where to place their hits, how to work our pitcher, etc.; but, sad to relate, his predictions were never realized.

Hammonton boys took the lead in the opening inning. The first two men up hit safely, were advanced each a base on Conley's out, and both scored on a pretty line drive to left by Cordery.

The visitors, while they never secured a lead, were always close and in almost every inning had men on bases, but failed to score after the second, until the ninth. In this inning they had three on bases and but one out. Poulner drove a single to right, and two runs came in; a third was cut off at the plate by some fast work by Angelow. Then, with two men on bases, Pitts drove a beauty to centre, which "Pop" Conley nabbed, and the game was over.

The Republican.

[Entered as second class matter.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1901
Mr. John A. Holzer, of Hammoncton, and Miss Fabian Dupont, of Connecticut, were married on Tuesday evening, June 25, 1901, by Rev. W. E. McKinney, at the residence of the bride's uncle, Mr. Henry Poyer, on Third Street, Hammoncton. They visited for a short time at Atlantic City. Congratulations and best wishes are extended.

Shipments of strawberries from Hammoncton, this season, were as follows: Penna. Railroad station, 3,037 crates; Reading station, 5,600 crates; Union station, 4,750; making a total of 13,387 crates of strawberries shipped from here. As the smallest crates hold 32 quarts (there are very few larger), there was a total of 389,694 quarts of berries. The crop was about one-third short of the average. Good berries have sold for a fair price, but poor ones sold very low. Our best markets this year have been Pittsburgh, Boston and New York.

List of uncalled-for letters in the Hammoncton Post Office on Wednesday, June 26th, 1901:

Leonard Vanderport, Peter Socker, Samuel Matthews, Edw. Jenkins, Francisco Portillo, M. A. Donelson, P. Costello, Carmelo Grasso, Donato Grasso.

FOREIGN
Maria Capillo, Frank Cucco, Francesco Cucco, Giovanni Alente.

Persons calling for any of the above letters will please state that it has been advertised.

M. L. JACKSON, P. M.

The advertised special school meeting, held last Saturday, was not numerously attended. Orrin E. Hoyt was elected Chairman, and D. S. Cunningham Secretary. After the call for meeting had been read, a resolution was offered, authorizing the Board of Education to purchase a certain piece of land on First Road, near Thirteenth Street, and to erect a school-house thereon, the entire cost not to exceed $1200; also authorizing a special district tax to provide money for the above. A ballot was taken, which resulted in a unanimous vote in favor of the resolutions. There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

Rosedale News.

The corner-stone of the new M. E. Church will be laid on July 27th, with appropriate exercises, conducted by Presiding Elder Dobbins, assisted by the pastor, James B. Ryan and others, visiting brethren. Builder Nicolai has prepared plans for a very neat building, to cost, above the foundation, about $750.

N. V. Conover and family have gone to Atlantic City for a while, as he is employed in a saw-mill there.

Bert Wells will hereafter occupy his own house, as he has taken to himself a partner in life. Our best wishes.

Mrs. Zimmerman, of Glasboro, is visiting Ben. Meserole's family.

Miss Helen Weber, formerly one of our brightest young ladies, is lying at death's door, with little or no hope of recovery.

Mr. Schenckler has returned from the hospital in Philadelphia, very much improved.

Burt Moore is on from the West, visiting his parents.

TO BUILDING CONTRACTORS.

Sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Common Freeholders of Atlantic County, at Old Fellows' Hall, Atlantic City, N. J., on Wednesday, July 10th, 1901, at 11:00 o'clock a. m., for taking out the iron bridge at Absecon, putting in tide-gates, and filling in road to grade. Right is reserved to reject any and all bids. Specifications and plans may be procured from

M. L. JACKSON, Chairman Bridge Committee, Hammoncton, N. J.

O. F. P. DOWNEY, Absecon, N. J.

SEALED PROPOSALS will be received at the office of the South Jersey Republican, on or before 12:00 o'clock, noon, on Saturday, July 13th, 1901, for the erection of a frame school house on the easterly side of First Road, 30 rods more or less from the northerly side of Thirteenth Street, Hammoncton, N. J. The building to be completed and keys turned over to the Board of Education of said town on or before 12 o'clock, noon, the 1st day of September, 1901. Plans and specifications can be seen at the office of the Republican. The Board of Education reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

By order of the Board of Education, E. ALABIN, Chairman Property Committee, Hammoncton, N. J., June 29, 1901.

Complaint is made of the conduct of boys (not all small) who bathe in the Lake, at the dam and elsewhere. They are not clothed as law requires, but their filthy and insulting language is particularly offensive when ladies are among the bathing parties. We have no Town Marshal, but it should be made some officer's business to teach these parties a lesson.

For the convenience of readers who may visit Atlantic City during the summer, we have arranged to have the latest issues of the REPUBLICAN always on file at the Philadelphia Inquirer's Seashore Bureau, on Young's Pier, at that popular resort. The Inquirer has, at great expense, fitted up commodious reading and writing rooms on the pier, where every attention will be shown its guests.

Last Wednesday night, Dr. J. C. Ritter visited a patient near Williams-town. He drives a handsome bay mare about seven years old, a spirited animal, which had never before been driven without bitless. When ready to start for home, about midnight, the doctor brought out the mare, but she quickly slipped away and started toward Clayton. Though the doctor searched all the next day, he found no trace of her. No one had seen a stray animal of that description.

Saves Two from Death.
"Our little daughter had an almost fatal attack of whooping cough and bronchitis," writes Mrs. N. E. Hayward, of Armonk, N. Y., "but when all other remedies failed, we saved her life with Dr. King's New Discovery. Our niece who had consumption in an advanced stage also used this wonderful medicine and to-day she is perfectly well." Desperate throat and lung diseases yield to Dr. King's New Discovery as to no other medicine on earth.—Infallible for coughs and colds. 50c and $1.00 bottles guaranteed by Crowell. Trial bottles free.

LOVE'S ROSES BY THE WAY.

Life may be a thorny way—
Brief in our path—
But the fragrance of the rose
A sweet soothing bath.
Vicious thorns may tear and sting;
Strichs they of wrath
Love's sweet roses over bloom
Fragrant by our path.

Life may be a cloudy way—
Hid the heaven's blue—
But the sun still sheds its light
Up above for you.
Though the storm to-day may rage
And pour out its wrath,
After all, God's sacred bow
Arches over the path.

Life may be a weary way—
Weariness brings heat,
Sorrow's hand may fall on us—
Mourning ones are blest,
While my child and storm may sting,
Storms may vent their wrath;
Love's sweet roses still will bloom
Fragrant by our path.

The Wedding Dress

RODERICK HENTON was about to visit his great-uncle, and he sat in the train under the glass roof of Paddington, impatient to start. There are various reasons for visiting one's great-uncle, such as politeness, policy, necessity—or he may be to give pleasure from your point of view, or to gain it (from him). But importance is not as a rule one of the accompanying emotions. The explanation of it in Henton's case was this: He had just returned from Blois, a town of middle France, and from a study of the French language, and there had preceded him by the space of three months—from the same town and the same study one whom he knew to be a beautiful lady in the world. She lived at Paddington, Mr. Henton's great-uncle also lived there. "Que voulez-vous?" as they used to say at Blois—Mr. Henton was impatient to visit his great-uncle.

Three months is a long time, particularly when spent in a perusal of the French irregular verbs and equally irregular French minor poets. Henton realized that he was not in the train. It is possible to forget so many things in three months. If Henton could forget nothing—except irregular verbs—either in those three months or the three before, when there had been nothing riding, picnic on the Loire. But would he remember—that afternoon, for instance—the vines were particularly purple on either bank, and there was hardly a grove or ripple when he ran the boat into the sand bank, and they had to wait there for over an hour in midwinter! She had been most gracious about it, and he had considered few places equal to a sand bank on the Loire. But after three months—the most beautiful person in the world must certainly have no many other things—and people—to remember. Would the train never start?

"Some one—a man—came up to the carriage door, opened it, and began to ram in baggage—things strapped together, and parcels and a box marked 'With care'—evidently—obviously—connected in some way with matrimony. "In that all!" asked the man, turning to some people behind. "Everything. But have you put my box in carefully?" Henton sat up in his seat. It was the inevitable third person. She spoke. It was her baggage. She was coming down in the same train with him. Truly the Great Western was the finest line in the world.

"The man was rearranging his about the box." "It wouldn't do if your wedding dress went wrong," he said. Henton, who had risen to his feet eagerly, collapsed as if with cramp. Wedding dress? The man had said wedding dress. "I shouldn't be able to proceed with the ceremony if it were crumpled. "Our bridegroom?" said one of the others. "It's in the rack," chuckled the man, "and no count, honor bright. And there's no hurry about getting in. Let's don't go for ten minutes yet. Let's walk up and down, and suppose after to-morrow we don't see you till the honeymoon is over?"

"The party turned away from the carriage and went down the platform. Henton was left to his contemplation, the hateful box before his eyes. He was to be married to-morrow, and by an irony of fate he was to travel down with her and her wedding dress. This was to put faith in a woman. It might have been expected, of course, if he had not been a fool. It would have been polite to let him know she was engaged; that could easily have been done. But, after all, politeness. At least two things were possible. Of all rivers in the world, the Loire was the most deceptive. Of all railways lines the Great Western was the most diabolical. What is the good of vines being purple, or of running boats into sand banks?

An old gentleman got into the carriage, took a corner by the door, and threw a pocket handkerchief over his head, as if contemplating sleep. His entry gave Henton the idea of sleeping while there was yet time before being seen. As he stumbled to the door the insufferable man who had rammed in the luggage turned the handle. "Jump in, Maitre," he said. "Train's just off."

Henton returned to the far end of the carriage. Maitre had got in and was nodding good-by through the window. "Good-bye," they chorused. "Don't forget to give me a tender glance as you go down the aisle to-morrow," added the insufferable man. "I shall be so nervous," she said. She took her seat as the train began to move, and in so doing became aware of Mr. Henton for the first time. A faint blush came to her cheek.

"Mr. Henton?" she said, holding out her hand. "This is a pleasure and surprise." "A great surprise," he answered, "very much so."

She looked a little perplexed at his coolness. "Are you going so far as Paignon?" she asked. "Farther," he said, "considerably farther." He had decided to go to the extreme limits of the world, where, while he was there, and volcanoes and other desolate things. She looked at him in wonder, resenting his tone, but made another effort.

"It seems a long time since we were at Blois?" "Only three months; but I agree with you that one can forget a good deal in three months." As a matter of fact he was agreeing with himself. "Not the sand banks on the Loire?" she said, mischievously. "Sand banks? Oh, yes—on the Loire of course."

"And the vines," she went on, "how beautiful they were—particularly that day we had our picnic. I'm bringing you with me, aren't you?" "A very pleasant day," said Henton, "but I don't think at that time that I was to have the pleasure of contemplating you on your wedding dress."

"Oh," she said, and a glimmer of amusement danced in her eyes—"thank you. If I had only known you were to be in England—but you won't even be near—otherwise I should have given you an informal invitation to come and see the ceremony." "I regret that I shall not be in the neighborhood." "Then of course it's impossible." Her tone was as cold as his now, and she also sat back in her corner. The train rolled on and the old gentleman took his intervals. Finally, as the train began to indicate a halt, he awoke and inquired if they were approaching his destination.

"I think so," she said, looking out. "Then perhaps some one will 'oblige me' by handing out my parcel as I get down," said the old gentleman, looking toward Henton. "He might as well have addressed the cushions. Henton was planning a scheme for exploring Patagonia, provided that rattlesnakes abounded there. "Politeness," snipped the old gentleman. "May I help you?" She handed him out his bag and his parcels and his air-cushion. "Thank you, my dear, thank you. But in my day it was the young men who assisted the old."

"The sound of his snuffing aroused Henton, and he sprang up contemptuously. "Can I be of any assistance?" he inquired. "No, sir. You cannot, sir. There is a time for assistance, and that time is when assistance is required, not when it is feigning useless." "I beg your pardon," said Henton. "I'm afraid I didn't notice you were getting out." "In my day," said the old gentleman, "young men did not get out in their own carriage." But the train began to move before the apology was complete. They were alone in the carriage now, both silent, and with her eyes fixed on a succession of the pages of which she perused and turned over with an almost incredible rapidity, without observing any one, except that she held it upside down, she staring out of the window at the moving landscape. For the artist, of course, it is an interesting part of the country to pass through. There are no views to speak of, and anyone whom Henton met on the road would not find it in the occasional alluring meander of the "Champan." On the other hand, there are many things that one can glare at

with a considerable show of enthusiasm, such as cows and advertisements. As a potential cowboy Henton would naturally lose no opportunity of jotting in his memory points about cows and advertisements. It would be a pity, however, if he did not wonder whether or no it would be necessary to provide himself with a stock of "Zonitons" before starting for Patagonia. In his mind's eye he had already laid in his cows and advertisements, and some tooth powder, and had looked his passenger-steering—when he awoke to the fact that, when the old gentleman got out he had been waiting in politeness. He had apologized to him. It is true, but not to the lady. What could excuse him for such behavior? He turned over the pages in his mind and could find none. He could not plead on his behalf that she was going to be married;—expected, for a lady's unexpected marriage is scarcely an excuse for quite another young man—no commutation of that lady—falling to hand out when asked the air cushion of quite another old gentleman. If he had been traveling down to attend his great-uncle's funeral he might have pleaded the distractions of melancholy. But his great-uncle was alive, and he ought to be feeling as cheerful as a lark. "Your marriage?" he repeated. "Yes, he had no excuse. And having come to that conclusion, Henton immediately began to make one. He took his eyes cautiously from off the feeling of the air cushion and looked at the carriage to where she sat. Patagonia faded into obscurity.

"I fear I was most rude," he began, apologetically. "Not at all," she said, coldly, looking up from her magazine. "But I was preoccupied," he went on nervously. "Why should you not be?" "I was thinking of that day at Blois that you mentioned."

"Indeed?" "I did not expect to hear so soon of your marriage." "Marriage?" he repeated. "Your marriage?" he repeated. "But I am not aware that I am to be married." "Not married? But—but isn't that your wedding dress? Aren't you to be away for a honeymoon?" "Oh," she said, laughing—"That? It's only Dick's nonsense—he takes advantage of being a young cousin to chatter. Really, the dress is nothing more than a piece of old material, which you congratulated me on becoming."

"But the honeymoon?" "My cousin's? She is to be married for my aunt's house in Paignon, and I am to stay for three weeks in the house of her aunt's daughter." "Then you'll be at Paignon?" "She nodded. "It's only a change of house I'm making—and here's Paignon already. So I must say good-bye." "But you said," said Henton. "My mistake," he said, hastily. "May I help you with your wedding dress?"—Lidia Globe.

When the One-Legged Bug Shoes. Where they do not patronize a custom shoemaker, the one-legged man or woman buys his or her shoes precisely like the two-legged person, at the ready-made shoe store, the proprietor of which, with an eye to business, is usually willing to break a pair to sell the single right or left shoe that the one-legged customer requires. The single shoe resulting in most instances to be corrupted, or, in it possible that American children are becoming a more distinctly speaking class. Examples of these are:

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Lizzie Bender: Mr. Bender, her husband; John Hines; Mrs. John Hines, his wife; and to the unknown heirs or personal representatives of Eliza Nestor, deceased: By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery, made on the day of the date hereof, in a case wherein the Hammonton Loan and Building Association is complainant and you are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer, or demur to the complainant's bill of complaint, on or before the second day of July, next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage given by said Eliza Nestor to said complainant and dated the thirteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and upon lands situate in Hammonton, in the County of Atlantic, State of New Jersey.

And you, Lizzie Bender, John Hines and the unknown heirs of Eliza Nestor, are made defendants because it is alleged that you claim an interest in said premises as part owner thereof.

And you, Mr. Bender, are made a defendant, because it is alleged that you claim some interest as husband of said Lizzie Bender.

And you, Mrs. John Hines, are made a defendant, because it is alleged that you claim some interest as wife of said John Hines.

Dated May 1st, 1901.

Signed HENRY P. ROCKWELL, Solicitor for Complainant. 317 Market St., Camden, N. J.

EDISON'S PHONOGRAPH

Better than a Piano, Organ, or Music Box, for it sings and talks as well as plays, and don't cost as much. It reproduces the music of any instrument—band or orchestra—tells stories and sings—the old familiar hymns as well as the popular songs—it is always ready. See that Mr. Edison's signature is on every machine. Catalogues of all dealers, or NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH CO., 135 Fifth Ave., New York.
