What Prohibition will Do.

What prohibition will do for a town has a fine example in Sheckelford Co., Texas. For many years this county has had no saloons, and Albany, the county-seat and terminus of the Texas Central Railroad, is the trading point for a vast area, and is full of business houses. It is the stock region of this, one of the greatest stock raising states in the Union, and speaks loudly for the men who are known to the world as "cowboys." There is not a house in the town for rent, and the demand is so great that a family rented the jail for a dwelling. This town is fast becoming an educational center, as the situation, altitude, and surroundings make it an ideal dwelling place for young people to receive the ideas that form character.

ASTONISHED THE EDITOR.

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennettville, S. C., was once immensely surprised.
"Through long suffering from dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength nor vigor, and suffered great distress from her stomach; but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well—can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, loss of appetite, stomach and liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50 c., at Crowell's.

The Local Telephone and Prices.

I take occasion to caution all subscribers of the local telephone company to read their contract. It contains provisions which, in my opinion, call for a sacrifice of manhood and self-respect to which I, as an American, could not agree. The result is, I no longer have the telephone in my residence.

On my refusal to sign the contract, I was notified that the telephone would be removed June 30th. On July 10th I was notified to pay in advance to Sept.
30th. I did so. They removed the telephone the same day they collected my check, although I had then paid in advance. I at once notified them that they must refund, which they did on July 31st.

The contract (if you sign it) gives the company power to collect in advance and keep the quarter's pay, even if you pay on the first of the month and they remove the phone on the second.
If you lose the telephone (supposing a burglar should steal it), you pay $25 per month until you find and return it, although in the contract it is valued at only ten dollars. If you pay the agent and be embezzled the money, you can be made to pay again, as "only the books of the company" must decide the matter. If you damage the telephone, you pay for it; but if they damage your house you get nothing.

It is a cold-blooded contract, drawn by shrewd lawyers, and means all that it says,—the company being judge and jury and appellant court.

Even if a subscriber is dishonest, it is no reason why the company should keep his money without compensation, render a receipt worthless, or collect $25 per month from him as long as he lives, for a lost telephone.

Why cannot our people have their own telephone line? Quite a number of citizens refuse to pay $25 a year to talk to twenty-four people, and submit to an iron-clad contract. If one hundred subscribers will pay me $25 each, I will furnish every man his own phone, to be his property, build lines on Bellevue, Main, Middle, Pine, Basin, Oak, and other streets and roads, and furnish service for 75 cents a month. Every subscriber will own stock, and have a voice in the management. Or, if any parties will organize a company, I will take stock and also take a back seat.

I have had experts to give me figures, and they inform me that we pay enough every year to own a line; and yet we submit to a servile and humiliating contract which I, as an American, refused to sign.

P. H. JACOBS.

Charles T. Schoen, of Philadelphia, President of the Pressed Steel Car Co., has taken one of the five per cent Gold Bond contracts issued by the Prudential Insurance Company of America, of Newark, N. J. The policy amounts to $250,000, requiring an annual premium of $18,370. The settlements under the contract are unique, the heirs of Mr.
Schoen having choice of two options: 1st, $304,250 in gold; or, 2nd, Company to issue to the heirs $250,000 in bonds of $1000 each, on which five per cent interest in gold is guaranteed annually for twenty years by The Prudential, paid semi-annually. At the end of the twenty years the Company is to pay $250,000 in gold as a final settlement, making in all half a million dollars paid by the Company.

TOOLE HAD TO WAIT

Costly Took a Seat on the Stage Until He Felt the Applause of the Audience. John Laurence Toole, the veteran English low comedian, is not well known to Americans, but he is a stage idol in the British Empire. He has toured this country, but for some reason—probably faulty management—was not a success. Toole's failure here can hardly be held to professional shortcomings, many years before the most popular comedian ever seen on the British stage. Not the least cause of his success is the readiness with which he adapts himself to any emergency. On one of his tours of the English provinces he was in Northampton. One evening he was on the stage alone, and at the end of his speech gave the cue for a fellow player. The latter was in some way detained, but Toole at once began to "tag" the time away, eventually giving the cue with great emphasis. Still no actor; so turning to the house, he remarked, coolly, "My friend, I am sorry to hear that the slightest way anxious to turn up, I will, with your kind permission, sit down and rest a while."

Then, amid the roar of laughter which followed the speech, Toole calmly took a chair and seated himself. A second later the tardy actor dashed on to the stage, taking up the cue, now long gone by, with the words: "I was waiting for you."

"Thou sayest not so?" remarked Toole, gravely rising. "I should never have thought it. Well, since you are here, well continue."

The Bald Eagle at Home

An old friend met us. He first showed as a black spot far up on the shore, then drifting gradually down upon steeply rising cliffs and out into the sea, trying to windward. It happened he was slanting shoreward when he passed, and at forty yards he showed his head and tail and broad brown wings. He showed to us advantages. We could see his head and tail and broad brown wings. He showed to us advantages. We could see his head and tail and broad brown wings. He showed to us advantages. We could see his head and tail and broad brown wings.

For years this eagle, hoary old beach comber as he is, has patrolled the shore. He has, for miles, seeking what the waters have cast up, for he is known to us as a scavenger. He has a keen eye for a dead fish and will beget for him the trouble of picking them up, but he can hunt, too, when he feels so disposed. Season after season he and his mate have watched the tide and reared their eagles in peace.

No one can climb the tree and no decent man would shoot at the birds. Should you visit the foot of the tree you are met by a pair of birds, one with a questioning odor, and your naturally brief inspection will convince you that the eagles do hunt more than they are given credit for. Everywhere are fragments of food which they have carried off. Wings and tails which must have belonged to grouse, portions of hares and other fragments suspiciously like certain parts of lambs, sucking pigs and domestic fowls. But they were not lambs, pigs or fowls, and so no shot whistles after him, and so no shot whistles after him, and so no shot whistles after him.

Understand that he is free to buccaneer to his heart's content.—Ed W. Sanders, in Outlook.

THE LATE HAROLD FREDERIC

How He Made a German Lieutenant Rejoice as One of His Own People.

Harold Frederic's self-consciousness and power of dominating strangers around him in good stead in one of his first visits—his first visit to Berlin. The incident, as he related it, seemed natural enough, but it was a military case, brought up in awe of a military case, but to those who know Germany it was almost surprising that he came through it with his life. He had been playing some formal diplomatic calls, and in the evening dropped in at the Cafe Hauar in the unwonted glory of a frock coat and a tall silk hat. This hat was carefully hung on a hat-stand, and Frederic sat down to read an English newspaper just arrived. Enter a particularly thin specimen of the lieutenant, hooded and aproned and avoided and quizzed. He brushed against the lieutenant, knocked Frederic's hat over into the street, and suggested to his seat without as much as looking around. The slight to the hat was more than Frederic could endure.

In a towering passion he went to the lieutenant, stood over him, and pulled to the object on the floor. "Pick up that hat, sir," he roared. "The officer stared amazed, the waiter was paralyzed with terror at the sight of his master's wrath, and he was addressed by a civilian. "Pick up that hat," repeated Frederic, in a tone more menacing than before. And the lieutenant did what he was told. He was so irresistibly dominated by the courage and force of the man in a schoolboy before his master; or perhaps he thought Frederic carried the threat of the American revolver.—London Evening Herald.

Most Costly of Known Feathers

The tail feathers of the frigate, a rare member of the family of Frigatebirds, or birds of paradise, are the most expensive known. Indeed, their price may be called prohibitive, for the only tuft of feathers in England probably in any civilized land, was secured with such difficulty that it is considered to be worth $50,000. It now adorns the apex of the coronet worn on state occasions by the Prince of Wales.

Science and Invention

A most remarkable case of migration among birds is that of the plovers, which start from Nova Scotia and go to the northern shore of South America in practically one continuous flight. Comparatively few of these birds rest at Bermuda and the Barbadoes.

In some interesting experiments by English botanists, "sleeping" plants, of those which had taken their nocturnal position, were placed in a dark room. On "awaking" next morning they took to the darkness their usual position by day, even when that position had been made obliquely by one-sided illumination.

Studies of the solarial light made at St. Louis, F. Bayloun, formerly of the British navy, to remark that the air over the Pacific Ocean appears clearer and better adapted for celestial observation than that lying over the Atlantic Ocean. Honolulu is admirably suited for clearness of air, and it may become an important outpost in astronomy. It has already been selected as one of the chief points for the study of the vibrations of the earth.

Was rice an angel? has been asked. The source of supply is a porous rock stratum which lies at a higher level than the well. Although the difference in height may not be noticeable, it is always the case that the water comes from one side, and the water accedes in some porous layer somewhere on the slope. Its weight exerts a pressure at the point where the stratum is tapped, and the water comes to rise there to the same height as its source.

Capt. G. B. Shelby, an English ornithologist who has devoted special attention to African birds, says that Africa may fairly claim to be "the metropolis of song-birds." It is the winter home of a large proportion of the most attractive small birds of northern Europe, including the nightingale, the swallow and many of the warblers, and the bush records with their melody. Africa also possesses a great number of remarkable and beautiful birds of its own.

Among the curiosities of migration among birds is that of the bobolink, which originally nested in the Eastern United States and wintered in valleys of the Amazon. Now these birds have extended their summer distribution west to the Rocky Mountains. The birds which nest in the far West do not go south by the shortest route along the Rocky Mountains, but fly eastward to the original summer area of the species, and then south by way of Florida, Cuba and eastern Yucatan.

Before the Biological Society in Washington recently H. W. Olds presented the results of his studies of birds. Wonderful as it seems, he said, it is a fact that some of the birds of the human musical scale. He showed by examples how the songs of certain birds are unmistakably governed by the intervals that compose our scale. Sometimes birds sing in a way that suggests human composers, wonder how the key, he thought that there was no escape from the conclusion that birds are subject to a musical evolution which parallels our own.

The application of scientific irrigation methods has recently given a new development to rice culture in south-western Louisiana, as explained in a bulletin of the Department of Agriculture. Rice requires wet lands, and such lands harvesting machinery cannot be used. The difficulty has been met by flooding the dry fertile lands during the growth of the rice, and then draining them, by a system of canals, drains and levees, when the crop is nearly ripe. On the drained lands it is possible to use reapers to harvest the rice; thus the cheap labor employed in foreign rice-growing countries can be used by American machinery.

ART OF PACKING CLOTHES

Laurel Home Journal Gives Some Valuable Advice.

As packing a trunk, first collect all the articles to be packed in one place, and then sort them according to their kind, says the Laurel Home Journal. Shoes should be wrapped in soft cotton covers, secured with strips of tape and placed at the bottom of the trunk, to either with any books, heavy wraps and heavy damask or woolen garments. Above these, and separated from them by a large towel spread and tucked down if the trunk is not of the dress or bureau variety, should come heavy underwear. A second towel should separate this layer from the piles of gowns or waists and a third should divide the gowns and fine underwear. The towels, besides making a useful protection to the different piles of garments, are convenient when you are traveling from place to place, and only want to from this rack depend separate hangings on which suits and gowns may be hung. This trunk is arranged to hold a dozen frocks without crushing.

ANECDOTE INCIDENT

Once when G. H. Spurgeon fell down a marble staircase at Mentone, he turned a double somersault, in the course of which some money fell from his pocket into his Wellington boots. Having lost a tooth or teeth in his descent, he humorously described the whole as the custom to find a dentist with money to boot!

Here is a gem from the Oxford Magazine: "A few days ago the rector of Oxford University received from a gentleman the following: 'How much would you like to see the young man in your son in your university? Let me know if I shall have to pay more in case my son, besides roving, should wish to earn to read and write.'

Dean Dickinson, the dean of the Oxford Royal, had preached before the Queen on Good Friday, at the Viceregal Lodge, during her recent visit to the Emerald Isle. Well known for his witty repartees. Once when he was asked that Mr. Fitzmaurice, ambassador to the Queen in Ireland, was paying a holiday visit to Niagara, he promptly remarked: "He'll find a cat-eract there that he can't remove."

At a certain cloth factory in Scotland it was the custom to rise to the workplace for turning out bad work. One day a workman brought a piece of cloth to be examined, and the manager found two little holes about an inch apart. He asked the man: "What are those holes for?" "For the manager," replied the man. "For the manager," replied the man. "For the manager," replied the man.

THE OLD AND NEW.

The old times—the old times! I sing "You high and low,"
But the new times are the brightest that ever have to know!
The old times had a sunshine; but "twice as bright to last;
As 'twere the face of the future with
"thanksgiving" for the past!

The old times—the old times! I know the stars were bright, As the sun came up the hillside with a ray round of light; The flowers were blushing round us, but they withered just as fast; So, we're glad of the future with
"thanksgiving" for the past!

The old times—the old times! But ain't the stars as bright?
As don't the dear stars twinkle down the blessed dreams to you?
We're thankful for the joys of old—the joys too sweet to last—As we're glad of the future with

A SOD HOUSE.

LENA. do you know what day it is?
"Yes, father, it is Wednesday."
"Well, you know what to do."
"Oh, yes, I forgot to salt the cattle."
"I'll go right now and see to it. How many are there in the upper pasture?"
"Eight hundred head. Take all you can carry—maybe you would better take time to pack it for me."
"All right, I will, then. It is hard work to carry so much."

The sturdy prairie girl went out from the sod cabin on the claim and started for the great stretch of grass land that reached from the ravine between the bluffs to the farther sand creek. Barbed wire fence surrounded it, and there was a large cottonwood tree at the corner by the gate. Inside were 800 cattle, and they had the run of a dozen sections of good feeding. It was her duty to take to them the weekly salt ration, and she had learned to meet the herd with the best of courage, though she was frightened at first. It seemed so terrible to see that great number of long-horned beasts come charging over the plain at the top of their speed—she could not realize that they meant no harm and that they appreciated her visit.

So she took down, the fat pony, and went cantering across the plain with the sack of salt balanced in front of her on the pommel of her saddle. Up hill and down, with the sun shining clear from an unclouded sky, she rode, and the trip was like joy in making her eyes shine and her cheeks glow rosy red.
It was not always this for the little sod house girl. At the old schoolhouse there were many sorrowful things, and the worst was the aggravation of the big girls on the back seats. The most aggravating perhaps was Anna Severn, the daughter of the railroad contractor who was staying in the country because her father's work held him there for many months. Haughty in her bearing and with the arrogance of her naturally aristocratic nature, she made no secret of snubbing the prairie girl who had never known a better home than a sod cabin and were not used to the delights that she had experienced in the Eastern cities.

It was on Tuesday of the following week that she had a new feeling.
The latter had made her home here in the spelling class and Anna recently it.
"Hush, nothing but a cattle girl," she muttered so low that Lena could hear her. "Hush the stock in summer and goes to school winters. Who cares?" Certainly Anna did care for all of her hazards. She was chagrined at her beard while Lena had been over her head and said nothing. She felt that she had lost a friend while she had gained a point in her class.

It continued during the day—the feeling of antagonism, and when the girl went home it was by different path, and the word went round the little circle of schoolmates that there had been a quarrel between Lena and Anna.
It did not require a reprint from her father to induce Lena to go out to see to the cattle the next day. She took down, as usual, the sack of salt and at noon started for the big pasture.
"Strange they are not here," she said, as she mounted the divide that led over into the valley of the pasture and no herd was in sight.

"You high and low," it had been a break-in the fence?
She was right in her surmise. There had been a break. A party of campers had come along the night before and had cut the wire in order to drive in and water their horses. They then went on, as is the fashion, and the cattle found the opening. Out through it they went and there was soon a spreading mass of horns and hairy backs over the plain. On and on they went, and it was not long before, led by the attractiveness of the grass, they came to the valley beyond and were out of sight of the pasture where they had spent their summer. So it happened that they were not found by the girl with the salt bag.
But Lena went on and came to the hill where she could see for miles over the plain.
"There is the herd?" she exclaimed. "I can see the whole lot of the cattle."

And she could. But she saw something more than that. Far over the plain was shimmering the familiar form of her schoolmate, Anna. On her way home from the railroad section where her father was overseeing the men who were taking her course directly in the view of the cattle herd.
As she saw nothing remarkable in that, but suddenly something happened that made a difference. On her shoulders was a red shawl that was not noticeable while it was worn partly under her long curls. But the instant prairie wind took it in its flurries and wound it around the little form and then threw it far out in the broad sweep of the breeze.
It carried it on and on, and Anna, running after it for a moment, saw the prominent figure in the landscape.

It was when she overtook it and held it with the ends waving furiously in the wind that she occupied the larger portion of the view. Lena saw it and reached the cattle herd just in time.
First one or two heads were lifted, then more, and soon there was a little sea of anxious faces ready for the leader and waiting to see what the next move should be. They seemed to rest until one big white steer started on a trot for the front and was apparently eager to make a closer investigation.

"Look," cried Lena, from her station of vantage; "look, they are stampeding on!"
She was right. The cattle were all getting in motion and were headed for the defenseless girl, who was overcome by the valley. Anna herself seemed alarmed at her danger and did not give notice the oncoming herd which would like an avalanche overtake her.
But Lena did not wait. She realized something though not all of the danger which the herd would bring. She was. For a moment there came a thought, "Why should I help her? Did she help me?"

The answer was not far to seek.
Lena had been injured and snubbed by the stranger; she owed nothing to her on that account. But there came a thought—another feeling overcoming the first, and with a sharp blow of her spurs that sent the pony forward with the greatest speed Lena had ever shown she was off.
Down the long slope, across the level plain below, through the tall grass and the windmills, then out on the level buffalo-grass plain she flew.
Could she make it in time? The chances were against it. She thought she could ride to Anna and then help her to the saddle and get out of the danger before the herd was upon them, but that plan was becoming out of the question. "She simply could not with all her sharp plunges of the spur make the patient beast go any faster. What could she do?"
Suddenly like an inspiration there came to her a new thought. As she galloped on she determined to put it in operation. Reaching down to the cord that tied the sack of salt holding before her on the saddle she found that it was all right. Then she turned back and aimed straight across the plain in front of the oncoming herd. To her right she could see the frightened girl energy in her left was the waving flag of horns and hoofs that meant death if there was not a change in their path.
For Lena's cattle are no respecters of persons.

Neater and neater they came together, and Anna, seeing the danger, called out with the quickness of great fear.
She held out her arms to Lena, but there was no time for an answer. Lena could not touch her and mind utilize every possible opportunity for success in her desperate undertaking.
Then, as she came near the herd, and just as she began a dash in front of the now excited and desperate cattle, she pulled the string holding the sack mouth closed, and there trailed down her a thin stream of whiteness that afforded in a long slower upon the short grass.
It flowed like a veil and made a ground through which Lena could pass.
Faster and faster she went, and just as the leaders of the herd came to the stretch of white she turned away behind their reach, the empty sack flapping at her heels.
But what of Anna? She stood as one

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Anecdotes and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

Bert Wallace has a whole row of colored glass tumblers which he has made himself. He didn't blow them, nor mold them, according to the best-known methods of glassmaking—he simply cut them down from old bottles.
And they make very useful and serviceable tumblers, too.
Bert didn't own a diamond glass point nor a steel glass wheel and so he cut the bottles with a clay pipe stem.
Seems odd, doesn't it? But any boy who wants to cut glass—and where is there have they appealed for the rightness of their cause; to these do they now look for countenance and support which they alone cannot give. Take them, therefore, Heavenly Father, under the protecting wing of thy love, and let the voice of thy uttering justice sound in their hearts, constrain them to drop the weapons of battle. Be present, O God of Wisdom, and direct the councils of this honorable assembly; enable them to settle things on the best and surest foundation, that the scene of blood may be speedily closed; that order, harmony, and peace may be restored, and truth and justice, religion and piety prevail and flourish among the people. Preserve the health of their bodies and the vigor of their minds; shower down on them and the millions they represent such blessings as thou deemest expedient for them in this world, and crown them with everlasting glory in the world to come. All this we ask in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Savior. Amen.—Current Liberator.

"How's that for a spanking team?" asked Tommy Brown of Johnny Jones, as the mothers of the two boys were seen coming up the street together.
"Can be beat in slippery weather," said Johnny Jones to Tommy Brown.

Artist Must Have Forgotten.
The manager was examining the proof of her little 4-year-old daughter's photograph. "Why didn't you smile, Nellie?" she asked. "I did smile, mamma," replied Nellie. "But I 'spect the man was busy and forgot to put it in."

Kindness to Dolt.
"Why, Edie," said a mother to her little daughter, "what have you done to your doll's eyes?" "I looked 'em out," replied Edie, "so she couldn't see that she had to sleep in a dark room."

Kingley's Hidden Pipes.
—Charles Kingley's rectory of Eversley was within a fairly easy walk of Wellington College, where the late Archbishop Benson was head master.
Benson was told by his son in the biography of the archbishop, saw a great deal of him. He told that once, walking with Kingley at a remote part of Eversley, on a common, the rector suddenly saying, "I must smoke a pipe," went to a fence and took down in it for a time, presently producing a clay churchyard pipe, which he lighted and solemnly smoked as he walked, putting it, when he had done, into the hole among some tree roots, and explaining that he had a "cache" of pipes in several places in the parish, to meet the exigencies of a sudden desire for tobacco.

An Excellent Medicine.
One of the best features of a sea bath is the salt water inadvertently swallowed by bathers. It is a wonderful tonic for the liver, stomach and kidneys. In many cases it will cure illnesses which all drug preparations have failed. It is particularly effective in ordinary cases of indigestion, disordered stomach and insomnia, and has been known to produce excellent results in many cases of dyspepsia. It is a natural remedy, and is safe in all cases. It is particularly effective in Basin-Hall in Biblical Times.

A member of the Canton Theological School, who is interested in the great basin hall, has written a little on "Basin hall among the ancients." From this he gleaned the following interesting points which help to establish his contention:
"The basin was the first conch-ber-eached by man when he stole first-Adam's seed."
When Isaac met Rebecca at the well she was walking with a pitcher.
Satan struck out a great many times when he beat the Philistines.
Moses made his first run when he beat the Egyptian.
Cain made a basin hall when he killed Abel.
Abraham made a sacrifice.
The prophet Sam made a basin hall.
David was a great long distance runner.
Moses showed the Egyptians that the
