An ex-Saloon Keeper's Statement.

The terrible evil of the saloon is illustrated in the statement of the owner of a coaly and attractive building formerly used as a saloon, in New York City, but who has gone out of the dreadful business.

"I have sold liquor," said Mr. Blank, "for eleven years,—long enough for me to see the beginning and the end of its effects. I have seen a man take his first glass in my place, and afterward fill the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon, who cannot now buy his dinner. I can now recall twenty customers worth from $100,000 to $500,000, who are now without money, place, or friends."—N. Y. Advocate.

Astounded the Editor.

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bonnetville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength nor vigor, and suffered great distress from her stomach; but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well—can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, loss of appetite, stomach and liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50 c., at Crowell's.

"DOG-DAYS."

Many people have an idea that dog-days are so called because dogs are subject to rabies at that time sporadically, and without inoculation by being bitten by other rabid animals or otherwise,—that there is something peculiar in the time of the year that causes the disease in the canine species. I feel it will be considered in place to give your readers the true origin of the name "dog-days," and thus relieve the innocent and much abused dog of the suspicion of being peculiarly dangerous during that time of the year.

Why is the time from the latter part of July to the first part of September called dog-days? In very remote time, the stars were mapped out into groups called constellations, and names were given these constellations according to the fancy of this unknown genius, whoever the mapper may have been. He named them after the gods, men, and animals. Two he named bears, two dogs, one lion, etc. The dogs (Canis Major and Canis Minor) had each a star of the first magnitude in it, and these are therefore usually called the dog stars. That in the large dog is called by modern astronomers Sirius, and is by far the largest appearing in the heavens, outside the planets. That in the little dog is called Procyon. These stars are in the same neighborhood and nearly on the same meridian, therefore rise and set nearly together. During the time we are considering, each year, they rise with the sun, and are therefore above the horizon during the daytime. According to astrology, these stars ruled the Earth during this time, and therefore this time was called dog-days. The name originated in mere caprice or fancy as to those magnificent suns, and astrology claiming and teaching that the stars ruled the earth and the destiny of men, as well as produced sickness or health according as the particular star had the rule or was above the earth in the day time. Every one can see that dog-days had nothing whatever to do with dogs, more than other days.

The time of the dog-days is the hottest part of the year, and it is more enervating, more decomposition of substances occurs, more miasmatic exhalations arise, and, therefore, that time is more unhealthy, perhaps, than any other time of the year. We trace these conditions to the effect of Sun, while astrology charged them to the stars. It may be asked, may not the stars influence the Earth? I answer: The planets—brothers and sisters of Earth, and all children of the Sun,—being near, and of affinized and similar matter, no doubt do appreciably affect the earth with their magnetic influence; but the stars, these distant suns whose light (the nearest one) takes four years and four months, traveling at the rate of 180,400 miles per second, to reach us, are not likely to sensibly affect us.

Sirius, the chief star in Canis Major, is so far that it takes its light 9.80 yrs. to come from it to us. It takes 12 years for light to come to us from Procyon, the principal star in the constellation of the little dog. The little dog is the larger dog,—that is, Procyon is much larger than Sirius. Comparing the two in size, and calling Sirius 1, Procyon is 1.3. In distance from us they are as 56 to 71. It seems rational to believe that those stars can not appreciably affect us.

To recapitulate, dog-days are so called from the dog stars being above the horizon in the daytime during those days. They were named dog stars from fancy, not from anything pertaining to a dog, therefore the idea that those days bring evil in any way to dogs is a mere superstition.

But are not dogs affected by the hot weather of that season, and other causes that poison the air and produce sickness among men, and thus make them more liable to rabies at that season? Dogs, like all animals and men, may be injuriously affected in their general health by atmospheric poisons; but the rabies are now known to be a zymotic disease, and cannot occur without the proper microbe in the blood, any more than wheat can be produced without the seed being sown. In Russia there is more rabies than in any other country, and the statistics of that country show that there is more rabies among dogs, wolves and foxes in cold weather than in the hot season. I know of nothing to disprove this relation of the disease to the temperature of the weather in any other country. Then why look upon the dog with suspicion and fear, as likely to have rabies in dog-days?

They Struck it Rich.

It was a grand thing for this community—that such an enterprising house as the Crowell Pharmacy secured the agency for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, the wonderful remedy that has startled the world by its marvellous cures. The furor of enthusiasm over it has boomed their business, as the demand for it is immense. They give free trial bottles to sufferers, and positively guarantee it to cure coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, croup, and all throat and lung troubles. A trial proves its merit. Price, 50 c. and $1.

Hitch your Horse.

That runaway accident, last week Friday, calls attention anew to the dangerous practice of leaving horses standing unbridled in the street. Of course you know your own horse, and his habits; so did Roscoe Bickford—yet his horse ran away, demolished another man's wagon, and injured four persons. Though your horse may be perfectly safe under ordinary circumstances, the excitement of a runaway has often communicated itself to a quiet animal and caused him to join the procession. There are lots of possible reasons why a horse should run away, and we have heard men say, "I didn't suppose that old nag had life enough to run." All in all, it isn't safe to leave any horse unbridled in a public place. Some drivers have a heavy weight in the wagon, with a strap and snap attached, with which the team can be secured in a minute, anywhere.

We have noticed, this week particularly, the large number who are thus careless—there being four unsecured teams in front of the Post Office, at one time. Then looked up and down street and saw people crossing, the children playing from one side to the other, the numerous bicyclists of both sexes and all ages, and thought what might occur should these horses be stampeded by some overlooked cause of excitement, and go tearing up the street, as did that fine pair last week. The following ordinance was passed about two years ago; but like many other laws, it is "honored in the breach."

The moon wasn't up yet, and the Lake was invested with that peculiar uncertain illumination that comes after sunset and just before moonrise. By its aid might be seen a boat as it suddenly shot out from its moorings and advanced toward deeper water. But the bottom of the boat was weak, and soon, she sprang a leak. Then little by little the water rose, until at length it wet their toes. Quickly they turned the boat toward shore, but still she was filling more and more. Then with a dread of sudden harm, upon a maiden with quick alarm,—started to seek a watery grave; then quickly striving her life to save, her escort jumped and quickly caught her, then turned and fell in the deep dark water. But his feet sank down and his head arose, then he hastened home and changed his clothes. Back again to the moon-lit lake, he heard them shout as they turned about, "Hello! D. D., you back? here we've been shedding tears all the evening in sorrow for your wake."

WAKING AT NIGHT.

When I wake up alone at night,
I feel as if I had no eyes;
I stare and stare with all my might,
But only blackness round me lies.

I listen for the faintest sound,
And though I strain with either ear,
The dark is silent, and I find no sound,
It's just as if I could hear.

But if I lie with limbs held fast,
A sort of sound comes like a sigh—
Perhaps the minutes passing past,
Perhaps the minutes passing by.

Perhaps the thoughts in people's heads,
That keep so quiet all the day,
Wait till they're sleeping in their beds,
Then run out and fly away!

Or else this noise like whirling wings,
That die with the first streak of light,
May be the sound of busy things,
All growing, growing, in the night.

Children, and kiddy cats, and pups,
Or even little buds and flowers,
Daisies, perhaps, and buttercups,
All growing in the midnight hours.

And yet it seems of me a part,
And nothing far away or queer—
Is just the beating of my heart,
That sounds so strange as I lie here!

I do not know why this should be;
When darkness hides the world from sight,
I feel that all is gone but me—
A little child in the black night.

Mrs. Basset's Boarder.

MRS. BASSET was dismayed to the verge of tears.

"I never thought you'd take it so hard," she said.

"Long have I boarded with you, Mrs. Basset."

"Seven years ago September, sir."

"Quite right. During that time you have occasionally accommodated men who wished to board here, but never women."

"I understand that no woman was to be received here. For the last year I have been the only boarder and the solitude has been delightful. Now this woman—"

"I'm that sorry!" The emotion in her voice was genuine. "When she wrote and asked me to let her come, I said yes right off. Once, sir, a long way back before John and me were married, I was in service with Miss Jeannette's mother. They were rich folks then, and held their heads high. All that changed now. It's me and John that have done well and got money. Her parents are dead. She supports herself. She teaches school—night school. She wouldn't be here in the evenings at all."

"She attends clubs, I suppose," he ventured.

"But he could not pack his previous possessions himself."

"I wonder," he cried in a somewhat plaintive fashion, "if you would be good enough to help me pack my books and things? I can bring my packing boxes out of the basement. I am going to change my quarters. We would have a few hours before Mrs. Basset gets home."

"The milk-white skin grew pink under his glance. For a moment she did not reply."

"I will help you," she consented. Somewhere in the kitchen regions she found and donned a big blue check apron. She presented herself at the first room of his suite, her sleeves rolled up, a soft old cloth in one hand, a feather duster in the other. The woman later watched her as she worked with an anxiety that finally merged in complacency. How well she knew how to handle a book!

"I feel like a criminal," he told her, laughing. "I know how how men feel who go of leaving their board bill unpaid."

"You may not think mine the best of reason, I am leaving because Mrs. Basset is to receive another boarder—a woman."

"Yes!" Clearly she expected him to say more.

"I understand she is one of those appalling creatures they call new women," he went on. "She supports herself, you know, teaches school, and even writes books on abstruse subjects."

"Dear!" ejaculated the pretty housemaid.

"Sympathy is sweet. If any one had told Alexander Freer that morning he would have been glad of it from him."

"A household he would have been in credulous. But here he was, bidding adieu to his fathered soul and fishing for more. He told her how he had never known a real home since his mother died, when he was a boy of 10. After that travel, hotels and boarding houses. "Here," he concluded, "I've been comfortably anchored for seven years."

"With leisure for my own interests and pursuits, and quite secure from interruption. But now I must give it up. I never can face that great creature in spectacles, who will talk pedantically to me across the table three times a day."

"Does she wear spectacles?" Freer lifted his hand out of the packing case. "I'm sure she does. They all do—the clever ones. She might expect me to take up municipal reform. She—the event of her breaking out on his forehead—might give him a little slipper—a birthday edition of poems—his might!"

"That's so," assented a solemn little voice from the ladder. In the silence that followed they heard the hall clock strike.

"Four!" Freer exclaimed. "So late! Mrs. Basset may be back any minute. Hark! Isn't that her now?" He stumbled to his feet, looking like a detected schoolboy. "There! One box is ready, anyhow. You must let me thank you, Miss—"

"Jean," she prompted.

"Miss Jean—and take this." There was a sound of the door which he opened to a tentative knock. "I'd like to ask you a favor, Mr. Freer, sir," began Mrs. Basset. "I've just got a telephone message that my sister, who lives on the West Side, has come down with pneumonia. I'm all alone."

"I've got, and I'm worried to know how bad she is. I thought—seeing how you were staying in, sir—"

"Yes, that's all right."

"But it's Thursday, and Della is going out. The new housemaid will be coming at 1 o'clock—it wouldn't be asking too much if you'd let her in when she rings—"

"Certainly. Any directions?"

"No. She won't need to do anything till I get back. Thank you, sir."

She took her pretty person away, and Alexander Freer went back to his book. He left his door wide that he might hear the ring. He did hear it an hour after Della's crackling skirts on the stairs had indicated her festive departure. He went down, opened the door. The girl in the vestibule wore a trim black gown, a tan jacket, and an unconscious little nod. He had a rippling reddish hair and the milk-white skin that goes with it, a neat little nose and eyes of forget-me-not blue. Something singularly youthful and fragile about the slight form, something lovely in the lifted eyes, appealed to him.

"Mrs. Basset was obliged to go out," he explained. "The clock is also absent. You are the new housemaid, I believe. Come in. Mrs. Basset desired me to mention there would be no task for you until her return."

For a moment she regarded him blankly. Then her lips dropped. "I am sorry," she said, "but I must go. I am off for my last and best thing. I have what you want to be done."

"To do that?" He had been staring off and on at the girl's face, and he had not been cherishing a secret plan of light? But he could not pack his previous possessions himself."

"I wonder," he cried in a somewhat plaintive fashion, "if you would be good enough to help me pack my books and things? I can bring my packing boxes out of the basement. I am going to change my quarters. We would have a few hours before Mrs. Basset gets home."

"The milk-white skin grew pink under his glance. For a moment she did not reply."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A DEPARTMENT FOR LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every of the old. —Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cate and Canning Children.

Several boys in Chicago improved the silt season with an exciting game which they call "silt fighting." Nearly every afternoon they gather in an open lot, and the silt contests attracted a little attention. Each boy has a pair of stout slits, with the steps about eight inches above the ground. Two of the boys are chosen as leaders or captains and they pick out their men, taking turns in making the selections. Then the sides separate and line up as in playing putaway or any of the old games. At a word of command from the umpire they advance on each other, walking steadily on their slits. When they get up close together they jostle and push one another down except to throw the soldiers of the other side from their slits without tipping over any of the soldiers on their own side. The moment a man falls the umpire calls time, the man who is down goes over to the side of the enemy, and the game begins over again.

Little Alexander of Tully was visiting his aunt in the country not long since. One day at the dinner table the lady complained that a small jar of preserves had mysteriously disappeared from the pantry. Each one present disclaimed any knowledge of the missing jar. At last the mother of the boy, who was sitting at the head of the table, said: "You must, wife, or you'll have to pay a fine or go to jail," said her husband.

"Do you suppose I'd have his wife know how old I am? I guess not."

"It is against the law for him to tell anybody what he learns when taking the census," he said. "He won't tell his wife how old you are."

Yes, he will; she's just dying to find out because she's so much younger than she does. You'll have to see him when he comes, and tell him I'm only 10."

Now this woman is really 45, and would call herself ten years younger if she did not have a big box of 55. The very next day the census man came round early, before the man of the house had gone to work. So he was sent to interview him, and wife hid behind the door to listen to the talk. Now, census taking isn't very funny when one has been to a dozen houses before.

"I'm that sorry!" The emotion in her voice was genuine. "When she wrote and asked me to let her come, I said yes right off. Once, sir, a long way back before John and me were married, I was in service with Miss Jeannette's mother. They were rich folks then, and held their heads high. All that changed now. ### Base-Ball.

Last week's game with the Lyceum A. A. nine, of Gibbsboro, was a very wearisome affair. The one-sidedness of the contest was sufficiently disappointing, but the spirit of lethargy which pervaded the grounds, especially the visiting players, caused a rapid thinning out of the grand-stand.

Our boys deserve credit for their good batting, and also for some fine plays in the field, notably Conley and Helsor.

Let's hope for cooler weather to-day.

The batting and fielding averages for July show a number of changes, especially in batting, where it will be noticed that new players are giving their older teammates a merry chase for the first honors. The most gratifying feature is a general improvement in both batting and fielding.

During July, the team increased their batting average from .259 to .295, and fielding from .888 to .901. Players are greatly encouraged by improved results, and are putting up a very strong game. During July they played seven games, all resulting in victories,—most notable being the twelve inning game with the Clermont Club.

In batting, Angelow leads, with the phenomenal average of .500. Conley comes second, having improved .024 points. James Jefferson gained .023 points, and occupies fourth position. Next comes Paul Jefferson, with a gain of .012. Loveland and Scull occupy sixth and seventh positions respectively. Helsor made a gain of .033. Ninth position belongs to Cordery, who made the largest gain, from .200 to .204. Setley gained .038, and Tell .029. The only loss is registered by Herbert, who dropped .024.

In fielding, Conley drops from first place to third. This was due to first place being held by Herbert, who made a gain of .013. He is closely followed by Paul Jefferson, who made a gain of .022. Fifth position is Cordery's, who gained .033. Helsor made a large gain, .005, his fielding in July being perfect.

The team has won ten and lost four games. The averages for July, and the general averages are given below.

EDISON'S PHONOGRAPH

Better than a Piano, Organ, or Music Box, for it sings and talks as well as plays, and doesn't cost as much. It reproduces the music of any instrument—band or orchestra—tells stories and sings—the old familiar hymns as well as the popular songs—it is always ready. See that Mr. Edison's signature is on every machine. Catalogues of all dealers, or NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH CO., 135 Fifth Ave., New York.
