RED CROSS WORK

To the Women and Girls of Hammonton:

Having attended a series of lectures, and passing with an average of 97, I am ready to give instruction in Red Cross work, if you so desire. Enroll your name with me at once, for the classes must only number twenty at each session. Those who prove themselves efficient will be appointed aides, and after covering a certain amount of work, they are eligible to take an examination from Red Cross headquarters, Washington, in a certain line of the work.

This work seems more fitting to the times than the making of fancy work to decorate the homes.

I will gladly answer all inquiries regarding this, and will make all preliminary arrangements for the classes. Should peace be declared, to-day, Red Cross work will have to continue some time, to care for the injured and create a surplus for emergencies.

Red Cross work has its strict standard, and by that is known all over the world. This is a fine training, and don't you want to do your "bit," and spend two hours a week? The men and boys who have recently been called have to give seven hours per day to hard drilling.

I shall be glad to confer with everyone, and when classes are arranged the Red Cross Secretary will notify you of place and time of meeting. My instructions are entirely free, and I am willing to devote several hours per week to this work.

MRS. CHAS. CUNNINGHAM.

Sewing machines are needed in the Red Cross workroom. Who can loan or donate one?

The work will be divided into three departments,—surgical supplies, surgical garments, knitted goods. Mrs. Chas. Cunningham will have charge of supplies; Mrs. S. Crowley Loveland, of garments; Mrs. Robert Smathers, of knitted goods. Workers are desired in the three departments, and those interested will please communicate with the heads of departments.

A large consignment of wool and needles has been received, and can be obtained from Mrs. Smathers, at her residence, or at Civic Club Hall on Wednesday afternoons. Teachers will be in attendance at the hall.

Three thousand knitted sets are allotted to Atlantic City Chapter and Branches.

"I am the truth." This word truth means very much more than simply the fact of being true. It is a principle. It is very sweeping in its range. It is virtue in its completeness. It is not one color of the rainbow. It is the rainbow itself. Christ, then, he the way and also the virtue strewn along the path. Now, virtue is the only thing of little value without a disfiguring mark. And the presence of the one or of the other will indicate the kind of path. If you have the virtue without leaving its impress on every action of your life we know what influence is dominating your life. It is the influence of a well-made. We know that the Saviour is your leader. But if sin is continually asserting its power, it is the influence of your own sin. It is the influence of your own sin and of the way you have made for yourself, and it never will lead up to the goal. It is the influence of sin. It is easy to descend, but remember, we are getting farther and farther away from where we ought to be, and where we ought to be is the goal to be.

It is very noticeable that in the closing part of Christ's earthly life there is a complete change of subject, of misrepresenting concerning Himself that seemed to have surrounded the disciples. It is a change of subject, and how were the people to gain a correct vision? The physical form of Jesus was soon to pass out of their eyesight, and the spiritual life in the world was to be instructed with those who had been so frequently with Him and had been so long in His presence. They were to be instructed with those who had been so frequently with Him and had been so long in His presence. They were to be instructed with those who had been so frequently with Him and had been so long in His presence.

his country now acknowledges that alcohol is not needed as a medicine, and that the medical community and the public will question the statement that as a beverage alcohol has been productive of enormous evils.

There are still many persons who, however, believe in the contrary. They think that a moderate use of alcoholic drinks helps them and that they are no danger of contracting an appetite for drinking that might become a strong desire. There are, however, no present an argument against even the most moderate use of liquor which is unanswerable, namely, that every man who drinks alcohol is liable to become therefore no man can lawfully follow my practice which unnecessarily puts him in temptation in the way of other people.

If there were no moderate drinkers, there would be no moderate drinkers. I am, therefore, every drunkard began by being a moderate drinker, and not because the fact that many persons who drink moderately all their lives without ever becoming moderate drinkers think to think they can do

I.

SHEILA GRUBY made a quest with a certain diffidence. She was doubtful as to how she would take it, she argued, as she knew she would be regarded as a person who would be grateful grant an afternoon off. But herald, would also not understand sympathies?

Yet, strangely enough, he herself wishing that he had been a man instead of self-contained Miss Gruby. Some reason or other he man would have been met a man, even if he refused so graciously.

Anne Smith raised d

"An afternoon off?" he cried, clasp, clasp, tone. "Forfeits to-day, Miss!"

Sheila whitened, and he voluntary sent forward.

"But my father is ill," he protested, "He's almost blind."

The eyes of the elder were bright and vividly blue, but he was almost ready to be their invariable escort regarding her junior title.

"What's the matter with your father?" she demanded.

"I can't say; I only know very ill, and that an operation is necessary. The doctor will make an examination this afternoon and he'll bring a nurse."

"Humph! I don't see where he for you to go."

A faint color crept into her cheeks.

"But he—my father—"

She glowed.

Golden
Risky

"Nonsense!" he said the quick retort. "That's nothing but sickly sentimental rubbish. I'm not a woman, and I'm not in love. In the way, and, in any case, I refuse to spare you."

The color in the girl's cheeks leaped to her forehead, her eyes grew large and round and shadowy, shrieking angrily at him as he gripped the back of a chair and leaned forward.

"You're wrong," she said, forcing her voice to speak calmly, "I must take this initiative, and act as I think best."

Anne Smith's lips twinkled, as if to say, "You're right."

"In that case," she mused in a dreamy way, "you may consider yourself under a week's notice."

And having delivered her that she turned away with an air of defiance, a misal and began rapidly to write.

For one stupor upon moment she stood looking down at her, wondering what she had to do with an air of defiance, a misal and began rapidly to write.

Indignation hot and strong surged up in her breast and broke all bounds of decorum. Words full of bitter, passionate reproaches came pouring out of her mouth. "You are cruel!" she panted; "cruel to treat me so at such a time!" You were not alone, she said, in your feelings. "We are so deplorably poor, father and I, and he—he is too ill to work. If it had been Miss Marlowe who had been asked to do this, she would have been as good as dead. Then why not me? Why do you treat me so differently? You are kinder to her than to me. I have never seen you so hard as at a dance. Here you are feeling—no pity?"

She broke off, choked with emotion; and then, as if she had been stung by the sting of her own words, she hid her eyes, her slender hand shaken from head to foot under a burning sense of injustice.

"I am not alone," she said again, when the other remained silent under her amazement at such an unprovoked and violent outburst on the part of an em-blunt least into Anne Smith's cold blue eyes.

"What do you expect, hardly. 'No, I have no pity and no feeling where'—with meaning emphasis—"the daughter of James Grey is concerned."

"I was only saying she should have left her, wondering what her words could possibly mean, that the older woman's features relaxed to something akin to a smile. "I am sure she would have spread her handsome face. For a long time she sat motionless, gazing into space, her thoughts buried in a private life—her own. She was working neglected before her."

At last, with an impatient sigh, she returned to reality, sent a swift glance at her watch, and then, pushing back her chair with a quick decision and hurriedly do not her out.

to her; but it making the recognition of her, she was obliged to turn only an inextinguishable craving to reveal her identity as Sheila's employer. She wanted to stab him as he had once stabbed her.

II.

It took James Grier some little time to get over his astonishment at this night of his unexpected visitor. Rating himself to a sitting posture on the couch, where he had been lying, he said to himself, "What a fellow!"

"Yes," he said, in a slow breathing, "I was aware that Sheila was employed by me, but I never dreamed that she would be so concerned to me that it might be you, Anne."

"No," came the dry, even reply, "merely that my very presence!"—merely that "you" ever remembered me for a moment."

His Anne's eyes were now searching, and his head was turned towards his brow. He had just remembered what a hard heart-intensified this woman had been to her own daughter, the girl.

It seemed unbelievable.

She had been so sweet, so womanly, so entirely sympathetic in these days of her sorrow, now she was looking to him before their fatal quarrel, the quarrel that had parted them. He was a young, new-made lawyer, red, just, just as Sheila had described her mother, all tenderness had fled from mouths that had been wont to grow sweet, and the softness had vanished from the eyes that were still as brightly blue as the sea. He was a young man, a young fellow, they looked like laces forgotten by light glass, and he said, gravely, then, to a sudden and startled woman, "You are not the same, Mrs. H." He added, hurriedly, "but there you go I want you to answer for me."

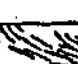

"You?"

The money-lender felt uncompromisingly from her lips. She looked at him, and she said, "You are not the same."

By actual count, 3,035 autos passed through town last Sunday, and over two thousand the day before. And these were only samples.

The Home Guards uniform will probably be a dark khaki shade, and include leggings, pants, blouse and hat. Members will buy their own shirts and belts.

Sports on Labor Day.

Besides the one or more basket ball games to be played in Park Hall on Labor Day evening, there will be races on the track from 11.00 to 12.00 in the morning, consisting of a 100 yard dash, 220 yard dash; half-mile, one mile, and two-mile bicycle races.

In the evening, if contestants enter, there will be a potato race and a three-legged race in the hall. All those desiring to enter will notify Thos. B. Delker before next Friday night.

In addition to the above there will be shooting matches in the morning, under auspices of the Kod and Gun Club, and a military program.

HOW TO USE THE FLAG

Congressman Bacharach sends the following rules in regard to the proper use of the Flag. Laws do not cover the matter, but these rules, formulated by the D. A. R., are approved by Government officials:

1. The Flag should not be hoisted before sunrise, nor be allowed to remain up after sunset.
2. Whenever possible, the flag should be flown from a staff or mast, but should not be fastened to the side of a building, platform, or scaffolding. It should not be used as a cover over a table, desk, or box, nor where anything can be set or placed upon the flag.

3. When the flag is used as a banner, the union should fly to the north in streets running east and west, and to the east on streets running north and south.

4. When flags are used in unveiling a statue or monument, they should not be allowed to fall to the ground, but should be carried aloft to wave out, forming a distinctive feature during the remainder of the ceremony.

When the American Flag is used out of doors, it should always be allowed to fly to the breeze.

When the flag is used in a fixed position, the union should be on the left as you face the flag.

When the flag is used as a banner, but in a fixed position, the union should be on the right as you face the flag.

For indoor decorations, the flag may be caught up in many artistic fashions, and used with bunting, garlands, plants and flowers, but should never be placed below a person sitting.

When clusters and draping of colors are desired, bunting or cloth should be used, but never the flag.

When the flag is flown at half-staff, as a sign of mourning, it should be hoisted to full staff at the conclusion of the funeral.

When used on a bier or casket, at a funeral, the stars should be placed at the head. In no case should the flag be allowed to touch the ground.

During the period of the war, there is no better way by which we can show our patriotism than by flying the Stars and Stripes from our residences or business houses every day.
