Applications are already being made for positions. Further information will be given next week.

A Sad Case of Drowning.

The entire town was shocked, early on Tuesday evening, learning that one of our popular young High School ladies, Miss Alice Aigner, had been drowned in the Hammonton Lake.

Among the many stories regarding the sad accident, the following is vouched for by eye witnesses.

Miss Alice, with Misses Mary Little, Jeannette Brooker, and Arra Loveland, went down to the dam for a swim, a little after 4 o'clock. All but the first two went in for a while, and came out. Several young men also came out, and went to the other side to dress. Alice and Jeannette entered the water, and not knowing of the very dangerous slope to the left, were soon foundering helplessly in the water. A warning was called to them, but they were probably confused. Miss Essie Nicolai, who has made several heroic rescues, fully dressed, jumped into a canoe and succeeded in pulling Jeannette to the side of the craft, after she had gone down twice, and towed her to safety. Alice did not rise, and despite all efforts, her body was not brought to the surface for ten or fifteen minutes. Much credit is due to Harry Carrell, who dove deep many times; also to Verrell Beverage (who finally located the body), to Frank Drake and Nelson Imhoff, for their untiring efforts to save the young lady.

After raising the body, Dr. McIlwaine, Dr. Cunningham (doctor), and Dr. W. Strickland went down at the place. They worked well in efforts to resuscitate the girl, but found life extinct.

Universal sympathy is felt for the grief-stricken parents, sisters and brothers. Mr. Aigner is still at sea, being electrical gunner on the U. S. S. "Arkansas." He is expected home about Monday, when his duty at League Island commences. Joe, her brother, is electrician on the "New York," at Brooklyn, and arrived home early Wednesday morning.

Alice was one of the most highly esteemed young ladies of Hammonton, being in her eighteenth year, having a smile and pleasant word for everybody. She will be missed by schoolmates, St. Mark's people, and a wide circle of warm friends.

The funeral services were held at St. Mark's Church, yesterday afternoon, very largely attended, and conducted by Rev. W. H. Davis, assisted by an uncle of the deceased, and the remains interred at Greenmount Cemetery.

Miss Brooker is under the doctor's care, suffering severely from her narrow escape from a similar fate to that of her companion and friend.

I also possess in my safe the most remarkable nugget of placer gold ever found in this country, far in excess of any value, far has been offered, at an extraordinary example of the handwork in the shape of a nugget. It is in the shape of a diamond, and pinner, and if it were at all to stick the size of a lead ball, it would make a very good gold stick.

AMONG THE HUMORISTS

A minister shortly after his introduction to a new congregation made a round of visits so that he might become familiar with the various members. Among those visited was an elderly female, who was busy whitewashing her room.

The minister met with a somewhat brusque reception from the good lady, and finding her the reverse of gossipy, he turned to the subject of her work.

Before leaving, however, he thought it better to ask if he should offer up prayer.

"No," to his consternation he received the reply.

"Very well, sir; you can pray if ye wish."

In one of the industrial towns in South Wales a workman met with a serious accident. The doctor was sent for, and came and examined him, had him bandaged and carried home on a stretcher, seemingly unconscious.

"What's to be done?" the doctor told his wife to give him fifteen cents worth of brandy when he came to.

"What brandy?" she asked.

"The wife told the daughter to run and fetch five cents worth of brandy for her father."

"The doctor opened his eyes and said, in a loud voice, "Fifteen cents worth of brandy."

It was a Scotch convivial gathering, and everyone had a certain "good entertainment" save a certain medico.

"Come, come, doctor," said the chairman, but the doctor protested.

"My voice resembles the sound caused by the act of rubbing a brick along the pincels of a door."

"That is due to the attributed tin to your modesty."

"Very well," said he finally, "if you can stand it I am willing."

Then the doctor protested as the doctor sat down, broken at length by the voice of a brave Scot at the end of the table.

"Well," he exclaimed, "your singing's not up to much, but your voracity is just awful. You're right about that brick."

An indignant woman entered a coal dealer in the street one day and loudly complained of the quality of the fuel.

A mother happening one day to overhear a group of little girls exchanging a scheme of revenge against another little girl, who had apparently done something very naughty, was grimly asked by one of the conspirators, "Why, my dear!" she said, taking her said, "it seems to me you'd go thinking of a scheme of revenge against me if I want her to do to you. I don't think this is the golden rule—is it?"

"Well, mamma," said the child, "I don't think 'the golden rule' is for Sunday, but for every day I'd a great deal rather have an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth—it's lots more fun."

"Thump—rallyety—bang!"

"Thump—'all that are you trying to play Jane?" called out her father from the next room.

"It's an exercise from my new instruction book, 'First step in Music,'" she answered.

"It's a horse you're playing with your feet," he said, grimly; "but don't stop so heavily on the keys—I

"The price you charged me for the stuff, and it won't hurt!"

"That's all right," was the reply, "cool is now at the famine prices, and we have to be satisfied with what we can get. I gave a good price for the coat myself."

"Then you've been robbed," retorted the grumbler; "why, my husband can supply you with the same stuff at half the price!"

"I didn't know your husband was in the coat trade, minna!"

"He isn't," snapped the lady; "he's a sister!"

The bundle, as the church officer is called in the lirk in Scotland, is a bundle of straw, containing a coffin.

A preacher of a trial sermon was thanked at the close, but the elders at the altar praised not his sermon. Later the preacher began gently bounding the bundle, but he also showed a strange reticence. "This is the Lord, and this is the Light of the world."

On the bundle showed him out there, and the young man, who was with him, said:

"Young man, your cause needs minna!"

A scandalmonger is a person who talks to our neighbors about us. An extortioner is a person who takes money from men stories about our neighbors.

Angero preacher once said to his congregation: "My brain, when he told me, Adam was created, he was made on wet clay and set up again on dry clay." One of the members of the congregation, rising to his feet, said: "Adam was made on wet clay 'n' set up again on the palm'n to dry?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Den who made de palm'n?"

"Hot down, sir," and the preacher sternly, "such questions as dat would agitate any system of theology."

"Plase, sir," said an Irishman to a farmer going to market one day: "would yez be on obligeing as to take me a little of that shilly shilly?"

"Yes," said the farmer; "but jawn will you get it again?"

"No," said the shilly shilly man, as he left; "for shure 'til I remain in side yu!"

THE OTHER STORY.

"That is a habit you must overcome," said Aunt Honora with decision as her niece, Mrs. Leeds, returned from bidding good-bye to Mrs. Stevens, the minister's wife. The walk from the sitting room to the piazza had been a long one, and Mrs. Leeds, unaided since she came back from the hospital the week before.

"Habit!" she exclaimed, as she turned to go, "habit? for a moment!" "It thought the habit of walking was an excellent one for an invalid."

anxious to become her friends. She was the eldest daughter of her husband and four small children and laughed and told stories with great ease—and in three weeks was well again. "I never," she said, "ever thought of telling Mrs. Stevens about her, or the laughing exercise in the wheel chair who traveled all over the country with her patients—such letters!" or the friends who divided her beautiful life among us. I really never thought of it. There is no one but Lowry's wife. I will try it on my own. Youth's Companion.

THE OPEN DOOR.

A reporter on a New York paper once wandered into a meeting of the Salvation Army in a little town on the coast of Maine where because he thought it would prove more diverting than anything else he could find to write he had come to the town to wait for his train. For himself, he meant little or nothing. He answered. "Several of my friends have had operations for appendicitis during the last ten years."

"And as many who are not your friends?"

"Yes, several," said Mrs. Stevens. "Mrs. Stevens doubtless called on every one of them within two weeks of their return from the hospital. I have no doubt she has heard the same story a hundred times."

"The same story!" Mrs. Lodge exclaimed. "My case was the worst ever."

"They all are," moeth Aunt Honora. "Your story differs from mine only in the choice of adjectives."

"But Mrs. Stevens seemed interested—"

"In every detail of your operation," said Aunt Honora. "I am sure she did—that was her business. But I pitted her from the bottom of my

When the time came for money," a man pait middle aged years," was a hopeless drunkard for many years," he said. "I came in from town on Christ. day, the year was 1890, and I was in the liquor."

A woman stood up, a heavy, fat woman whose clothes showed poverty.

"I had had to work hard all my life," she said. "For forty years I never knew a happy hour. Two ago I got religion, and I haven't an unhappy minute since."

Other gave similar accounts of their lives.

That evening, he chose a seat where he could be by himself. He was chance to think. There was "The slide lights!"

"Yes, the slide lights," repeated Aunt Honora. "The slide lights of hospital day." The story of the poor woman who never once looked about her after the nurses passed with the sheet, and cried, "And after she had enjoyed that luxury a few minutes, she fell motionless on her bed." And when the nursing-board found a slip of paper weighted with a lemon drop. And on the paper she readily got acquainted with you. Your flight had neighbor."

"And the woman did look out," Mrs. M. went on. "She was in the bed next to her before the smiling, motherly face of the broken-lip patient—and doctored that she, too, would like to be in the hospital. And she and I were wholly dried, who she introduced to all the other patients in the ward. In the end of her long, sweet-scented bed, she told the drooped hospital-ward was only a large room in which there were eleven women who were thick and had made that tremendous change to those people's hair and lives?"

All over the world hundreds say that something new, thing has come to this every age for the past nineteen centuries, and that the world has been made to have been predestined testimony. Almost two hundred years ago there was one thing that labor and are heavy and I will give you rest." He do.

"They liked it! And I dance. Don't you think I shall get on?"

"I hope so," responded Dick Rathmell, with an effort.

"You aren't very cheerful about it, must say!"

When Dick Rathmell returned from escorting her to her lodgings, found his mother still downstairs.

"The place won't seem the same without her. I wish I could ask her to marry me!" he blurted. "But—she's obvious she doesn't want me. If she stayed, it would be all same!"

He was working strenuously not trying to forget his feeling of loneliness. Even after a evening studying subjects like mathematics to him in business; and, finally, the different point his reward. An portentous post fell vacant, and the papers were offered it to him. He felt a chance came he proved himself capable than the rest.

His income was increased by half. If only this had happened a few months before! Then he reflected bitterly, he might, at any rate, have asked May Bittler that all-important question.

A few days later he wrote and mentioned the change in his fortunes; but she only answered with a handwritten postscript of congratulation to a husband.

"I'm afraid she isn't such a success as she hoped," Mrs. Rathbone commented.

"And, even if she's in want, she's never let us now!"

About this time his name was coupled with Life. Burrhead, who was the daughter of a leading manufacturing firm in the town. It seemed as if she had been married to him partially for Dick Rathbone; and so, unfortunately, he was fattened.

Dick Rathbone had been looking for a line from May; but a long intermission without any things whatever, when came a plethoric letter from a provincial town, stating that she was now with "The Queen of Hearts" company. In the town of her new employment, May Hillier was still unloved among the cast.

"She'll have been having a hard time," observed Mrs. Rathbone, with a sigh, "all among strangers."

She couldn't see it any other way.

she walked impatiently for her son to return from business. He entered quietly at last, and sat down.

"You're late, Dick."

"I met Miss Hurrard, and walked up as far as her gate. I'm going to avoid her in future."

"You've quarreled?"

"Not exactly," he answered jerkily.

"No; that's out of the question realize it now."

"Do you still ever think of me?"

"He gave a start, and glanced up at her. "I don't know," he said, "but I don't think of you very often."

"Shortly then, Dick, she's coming back?"

"Here? For how long?"

"I don't know. For good, I suppose, poor child!—Oh, there's only consolation we can draw, Dick, because the 'Queen of Hearts' is still touring the country, and she's bound to be even in the allglight. There mustn't be anything I can do."

"The girl returned one Saturday. Dick Rathmell stayed indoors all afternoon; but when she appeared in the evening he went out to meet her. She sat near Mrs. Rathmell, as usual, and talked to her, while he listened for a moment, and then turned away. "So you were in London a day, while before you got another engagement, my dear?"

"I was in London," Mrs. Rathmell responded, starting up. "I sold off pawned nearly everything I had, and I got about thirty dollars, with no prospect of getting any more. I paid a fortnight's rent, and I was obliged to leave. It happened by the end of that time was going to confess myself bankrupt. As it was, I—I didn't have much more than a day, and caps of it at intervals."

Mrs. Rathmell murmured in sympathy.

"—you see, I had to keep some more clothes so that I could visit the agent. I've often come out well-dressed, but I don't like to go out without anything on foot, walking miles, bare panny-bus-far's. When I was in London, I was obliged to go to the 'Queen of Hearts.' I could have danced and screamed for joy. She thought the town was over."

"And you were so patted her shoulder?"

"You lost your place in the chorus, I understand."

"I've decided to give up the stage."

"And I think you're very wise, my dear."

"Don't I glorious!" Eve always roared. I should like to go on the stage. The salary isn't much, but I can't get any other kind of part, very likely, after a while."

"I don't want to disharten you," observed Mrs. Rathmell slowly, "but singing's very good, for anyone who's had no professional experience."

"They liked it! And I dance, too. I think I shall get on."

"I don't think so," declared Dick Rathmell, with an effort.

"You aren't very cheerful about it, must say?"

"I don't," declared Rathmell, returned from courting her to her lodgings, and his mother still downstate.

"The place won't seem the same without you," declared Mrs. Rathmell, "but I don't want to be married!" she blurted. "But, of course, obvious she doesn't want me. Even she stayed-it would be all the same."

"I don't understand it," Mrs. Rathmell said to Ned. "You don't like Dick to take you out while I'm busy. You'll be angry when you come back."

"The girl seemed half reluctant to go," declared Dick, "but I went with regret. They had gone some distance before she did notice I was giving monosyllabic replies."

"That's Burraid's house, isn't it?"

"Yes, that's it. You don't know call there now? At one time I thought you'd be wanting my best wifeguards. Your mother hinted in one letter that she'd like to see Burraid."

"Mother was imagining things," declared Rathmell quickly.

He tried to meet her gaze, but they walked with head averted. They noticed the common, and sat down on a bench.

"Are you going to stop? We've been hoping you would."

"So have, but," he could hardly catch his breath, "I'm not sure."

"Have you any news?"

"After that 'The Grass City' tour of a theatrical newspaper, but, as you know, May Blittler's name was never mentioned in print. Few letters came from the public, and she was disappointed in her progress. She was saying it all; the members of the 'Grass City' were all well, and she was giving good houses—such things Mrs. Whitmore read out to her son.

"'I wish you'd wait by me almost all day,' she was saying."

"He was working strenuously now, to forget his feeling of loneliness, and he was writing and editing subjects likely to prove of use to him in business; and, finally, this day he was writing a story, and he had just put forth all his hard times in London," he insisted, as they rose. "Forget all about going out the stage—go on with your work. You're always in the Hilt street."

"Of course," whispered the girl directly, "we'd meet Mrs. Crouch! Don't let her see you!"

"No, no," he laughed. "Won't she be annoyed to hear the news from you?"

The middle-aged lady crossed the street.

Ormond, about seventy miles south of Ft. Augustine, is one of Florida's most beautiful spots, situated on a narrow peninsula between the ocean and the Halifax River, a stately half-mile-wide stream bordered with palm trees and tropical growth. Ormond's attractions have drawn to it scores of men of wealth from all parts of the North. Here, from November to April, may be enjoyed the splendid boating and fishing furnished by the Halifax River, the surf-bathing in the ocean, driving, riding, tennis and, particularly, the game of golf.

No reference to Ormond would be complete without mention of the famous Ormond-Daytona beach speedway.

Here are miles and miles of broad sand beach, as hard and smooth as a floor, where the temptation to show the lover into the vast open stretch is not to be denied. And here man has traveled all distances, from a mile to a hundred miles, faster than anywhere else on earth.

Daytona was named for Matthew Day, of Mansfield, Ohio, who founded it in 1871. The town is beautifully shaded and lies parallel to, and immediately on, the Halifax River, extending along its banks for nearly two miles. Across the river, which is about half a mile wide, are three bridges, in what is known locally as Pelican Island. Upon this

A dapper young shop assistant was in love with the daughter of a prosperous farmer. Imagine, then, his feelings on finding the lady entirely unimpressed by his handsome and attentive steward, who speedily became her own steward. One day the steward entered the shop where his would-be rival was waiting for her to see some boots suitable for presents to his future enemy, the assistant, feeling still more satisfied.

"What do you two have a fine edition, lately published, on 'How to Run Pigs.'"

As he spoke he took down a volume. "I'm terribly disappointed," the young man calmly asked the steward, with an air of supreme contempt. "What a great pity that your mother never saw it!"

oak trees, with moss-covered branches, New Smyrna is most attractive.

Indian River is situated on the banks of the Indian River and is at the head waters of that far-famed stream. It is the favorite point of fitting out for the Indian River fishing boat. To the southeast lies a magnificent sheet of salt water, about six miles wide, formed by the waters of the Indian River where they empty into the Gulf of Mexico. Boating and rowing are indulged in.

Stockledge is located on the Indian River, amid a forest of palmetto, magnolia and live oak.

Among the Pineapples.

Port Pierce, the next principal place on the southbound trip along the coast, is a small town situated in the great pineapple belt of the State.

Tests of electrical smelting at the mines in Wales have shown that the cost of smelting is about 1 per cent as compared with 5 or 9 per cent by former methods.

According to a Canadian patent for a method to prevent smoke, the coal or lignite may be heated, or during combustion, with a solution of sodium chlorate or perchlorate. The sodium permanganate, potassium chlorate and potassium dichromate are used in equal parts by weight and dissolved in the same weight of water. A smaller proportion of these salts may be used, but the mixture may be greatly diluted.

The furnace liberates the oxygen which consumes and prevents the emission of smoke.

DISAPPOINTED.
Your father Bridgroom—I had hoped you would forgive me by this time for asking you away from my luxurious home.
Young Hilde—Why, Charles, he forgave you long ago. What made you think he hadn't?
Young Bridgroom—Why—er—there has been a change of life and I will bring Charles to go and live with me.

John Tell applied for license to run a pool-room in the basement of the Tell building. Granted.

The ordinance authorizing permanent improvement of Bellevue Avenue, from the railroad to Third Street, was adopted. (Published on another page.)

Clerk instructed to have advertisement for bids for Bellevue Ave. improvement prepared by Solicitor, and have same published in local papers and Philadelphia Inquirer.

Ordinance authorizing issue of bonds for $117,000 passed second reading.

Subject of a dangerous place in the Lake, near the Dam, was discussed. By vote, Mr. Nicolai was authorized to set iron pipes, connected with wire cables, to warn bathers of danger.

Highway Committee instructed to repair a bad spot in Bellevue Avenue, at School Lane, by laying vitrified brick in the gutter.

Complaint was made of a very bad hole in Valley Avenue, where water collects and remains. The Overseer directed to take care of the place, either by turnpiking or filling.

Engineer McIntyre, of the disposal plant, granted a leave of absence for four days, he to provide a substitute.

Adjourned at eleven-one.

For Economy
The Westinghouse
Electric Iron.

If you pay the servant by the day, you will find it much cheaper to use the Westinghouse Electric Iron, because it saves time. No waiting for iron to heat—no delay of any kind—always at the right temperature.

Have you seen the new iron with the heater that is guaranteed for seven years?

Ask for one on trial.

If you have an iron of obsolete type, or one that is not giving you satisfaction, bring it to our office, with a TWO DOLLAR note, and receive one of the new 1915 Irons in exchange.
