MORE ABOUT COW PEAS.

VALUE FOR PLOWING UNDER.

A writer in the Southern Planter says he cut part of his cow peas for fodder, and another part he turned under and sowed the whole to wheat, and got five bushels more wheat per acre where all the peas were plowed under. Another man in the Upper Piedmont region, Virginia, sowed cow peas among his corn, broadcast, on part of the field. The other part he planted in corn six feet apart and a row of peas between, and cultivated the whole. The following year he planted to corn again, six feet apart with peas between, and cultivated both. Although the last year was an extra corn year, this year, where the peas were sown broadcast the corn is 40 per cent better than last year, and where the peas were sown in rows, 20 per cent better. These were statements made by these men to Prof. Massey, and show plainly that the peas have power to enrich the soil.

His reply, in the Practical Farmer, is, he would not dare to plow under any green crop, for fear of scaring the land; and that they have even a greater value for feeding than for plowing under. He says there was no doubt 1½ tons of pea hay per acre, worth at least $15; that makes the best hay for cows, and that in addition it has a manurial value of at least 50 per cent more, if the manure is properly cared for.

So here is a case where you may eat your cake and keep it too,—at least half of it,—and proves that if you have stock to feed the peas to, it is more profitable to cut than to plow under.

Still, for the fruit grower who has little stock, where soil is lacking in humus, they may be plowed under after they are dead, with good results. As to plowing under green or dry, the question settles itself in my own case, for they are lodged in anything but straight lines, often diagonal with the furrow. Possibly a sharp wheel coulter would cut the lodged ones into furrow slices, and a hay scythe clasped to the beam but extending above as a coulter does below, might cut the vines apart; then by using a chain they might be put underneath with a large plow. I shall let rest until the twining vines, and the weather rot them, so they can be turned under without trouble.

In the South they turn in their stock and hogs on the peas, where they eat and tramp and get fat with no other feed; then plow under when ready to sow or plant the next crop.

I believe where a man has twenty or thirty acres of land, it would pay well to put ten acres of it every year into peas, raise hogs to eat them, and thus fatten hogs and land. Crimson clover could be used as an early green feed, followed by the common red clover, and finish up on peas.

As a fodder, my experience is only with horses. I have put good fresh hay and cow peas (cured) before them at the same time, and they would choose the peas. I suppose a horse knows a good thing when he tastes it, and as the proof of the pudding is the eating, the vote is clearly in favor of peas on the score of palatability. That they are a very hearty feed is proven by the fact that my horses were never in as good condition for hard work as they were last Spring and Summer, and with less grain than usual. What they contain of feeding value is shown by chemists, and how they compare with other fodders I will state in a following article.

TIME TO CUT—HOW TO CURE.

They should be cut before the stalks change largely in woody and therefore indigestible fiber, for it is not what an animal eats, but what it digests and assimilates that is of value to it. I cut when the first pods begin to turn brown. The quickest way to harvest is of course with a mowing machine and horse rake, but as there is no seed, as with grass, this method is open to the objection of making the peas very dusty. I cut with machine last year, but raked by hand. Shall cut and rake by hand this year. I cut as soon as the dew is off. Turn the swaths over at night if they have wilted. Next day, before they are dry enough to drop their leaves, rake into windrows. If weather is fair, leave in these till next afternoon, when they should be stacked in rather small stacks but as high as they will stand. They will shed rain better than clover hay, and should be left until you can twist no juice out of the stalks. When about to draw, open to the sun and let the sweat dry off. Put into a tight barn and let them alone, even if they get hot. To disturb them is only to let in the air more freely, which always bears the germs of mould and will do more harm than good.

P. H. BROWN.

An Explanation.

I received a letter from Mr. Stephany, Atlantic City, in which he stated that my several letters in the REPUBLICAN were of a character reflecting on him injuriously, and that he desired a retraction.

It is not necessary to review these letters and discuss them, in order to make a defence or admit errors, as such would be superfluous. So far as my allusions to the work done by our Town Council is concerned, I have no explanation to make to anyone, but will state that at no meeting since I have been a member has a single offensive expression been used by any member to another; and though some are trying to accomplish purposes not endorsed by others, yet all work has been done in a friendly manner. My letters were all written with the view of attracting attention to the action of Council on the license question, which to our town people is an important matter. But it did not occur to me that while the intent of my letters was well understood by town readers of the REPUBLICAN, those living elsewhere may not be so familiar with the circumstances, and that the style in which the letters were written might not be objectionable to some, but very much so to one who does not know all the facts. Hence it is not only justice, but my duty to Mr. Stephany, to retract all portions referring to him. He has never harmed me, nor given me cause to bring his name before the public discreditably, and I would be lacking in my efforts to do what is right if I did not express my regret that I have offended him. I do not consider that any man can dishonor himself by making an apology when he has reflected injuriously on another.

The Republican. [Entered as second class matter.] SATURDAY, SEPT. 4, 1897.

The Atlantic Review reflects unjustly upon the authorities of Hammononton when it states that they desire to prevent justice being done in a certain criminal case now in shape for the next Grand Jury. The truth is, Constable Bernhouse drove to Folsom the night after the crime was committed, heard the recover's story, and secured a promise that the parties would come here the next morning and make formal complaint. They did not come until Sunday, then Justice Prosser heard the story and declined to issue a warrant, because in his opinion there was not sufficient evidence. Wednesday following, by Constable Bernhouse's advice, they went to Atlantic City and hid the case before Prosecutor Perry. When the messenger came here, Constable Bernhouse took his team and carried him wherever it was supposed any addition light could be thrown on the case. If any one is striving to suppress the case, it is not the legal authorities of Hammononton.

The neighboring hamlet of Elm was moved from the even tenor of its merry wedding bells. The parties were Mr. Harold E. Rogers, of A. T. & T. Co., Philadelphia, and Miss Laura A. Wood, of Elm. The immediate families of the contracting parties assembled at the home of the bride on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 2nd, and witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. J. C. Killian, of Hammononton. They then partook of a feast prepared for the occasion. Friends then accompanied them to the Reading Station at Winslow Junction, where amid showers of rice (the old shoe not omitted) they started on a two weeks' trip through the New England States. They will reside at Haddon Heights, N. J. Long as they reached the railroad station the threatening clouds broke away, and the sun shone in its beauty, fit harbinger, it is hoped by their many friends, of a life of happiness and joy.

Silvermen in the Democratic party continue their efforts to drive sound money Democrats into the Republican party, and are meeting with success. In every campaign planned thus far, they are making silver a leading issue, and the result is that the division of that great party, which was begun in the campaign last Fall, is being made permanent.

IT IS SIXTEEN TO ONE
THE SCORE OF SATURDAY'S GAME WITH THE HIGHLANDS
Mr. Spieker would allow very little discussion of the question by the opposition, while his combative made the bat talk eloquently, and the measure was passed,—16 to 1.
"What a fine game!" every one declared, until the fifth inning, after which no one had the temerity to make such an assertion.
Our boys certainly did put up a fine "which and t'other" game until fifth, when Tell's muffed of Treat's assist was the entering wedge which caused the home team to seemingly fall to pieces.
Right here we might say that Tell was not at all well, and played under protest, no one being obtainable to take his place.
Up to the fifth inning, only two hits and one base on balls had been obtained from the "kids" pitching, but now they began to "touch him up" a little, and bases on balls increased,—four out of the six who reached first on called balls, scored. Though a little strange to their positions, Watt, Farrar, and Gifford each played well. Farrar's running catch of Sharpless, in third, and Gifford's stop of Cassell's drive, in the fourth, in time to catch Holland at home, deserve special mention. Setley has struck his gait at short.

A Valuable Prescription.
Editor Morrison, of Worthington, Ind.
