The Tomato.

(Extracts from a lecture delivered by Thos. Meahan, before the Germantown (Pa.) Horticultural Society, Sept. 8, 1887,—written for the REPUBLICAN by Dr. M. M. W.)

The tomato belongs to the Solanum family, and with the egg plant and potato to the least poisonous of that very poisonous family. In most all countries it is called the "love apple,"—tomato being the Spanish for love apple, from the Latin amo—to love. It has been much improved by cultivation, until it has become a very popular as well as a very wholesome vegetable; although I can remember when we considered it unfit for food. The vines of the tomato are sometimes poisonous, as well as the fruit of the potato. Children have been poisoned by eating the berries of the potato vine.

The tomato is one of the carnivorous or meat-eating plants, to which class belongs the pitcher plant or Sarracenia purpurea, so common in the swamps of New Jersey, belongs. The pitcher plant catches insects in its cups or leaves, drowns them in the water with which the pitchers are partly filled, then absorbs the ammonia to get the small quantity of nitrogen which their bodies contain. The tomato and many other plants, on the contrary, absorb ammonia and nitrogen by secreting a sticky substance upon their vines and leaves, to which the above odors in the atmosphere adhere, and are absorbed by the glands of the plant. This has been proven beyond a doubt by laying thin slices of meat on the plants. In time the nitrogen and ammonia were absorbed and the meat about consumed, while on plants which are not carnivorous the meat would be taken off about the same as it was laid on. Prof. Darwin proved the character of many of these plants years ago.

The tomato is greatly nourished by the atmosphere, and in proportion to its roots, yields an enormous load of fruit, one vine frequently yielding a bushel in a season. The roots are small. If you plant a vine near a manure heap, and another, the same age, in as good soil where it cannot absorb ammonia, the roots of both will be about the same, but the vines will vary greatly in size and production. Those near the manure heap being of much greater size.

Other members of this family (and very poisonous ones) are the night shade or belladonna, and stramonium. The petunias also belong to this family.

The lecturer spoke of some dahlias and asters on exhibition. The dahlia has roots containing starch, and similar to the potato. The potato tuber is not a root, but a branch of the plant,—the vine branches under ground, and the tuber is an enlargement of a branch, with eyes similar to the buds of a tree, and will produce its kind. The potato has roots as well as these branches with tubers. The dahlia has roots without eyes, and will not produce its kind unless you split down the stem and get some of the buds which grow on the stem, close to the ground.

Some very large coxcombs, or amaranths, as large as cauliflowers, next claimed attention. The cock's comb contains the male flowers of the plant, while the lower ones further down the plant are the female.

After the lecture he named two weeds taken from Ancora, Erechtites or fire weed, from the Greek, to trouble. It is a troublesome weed, now maturing its seed which blow about like small flakes of cotton. A weak tea of this, taken in tablespoonful doses, is good for nose bleed. The other plant was Erigeron Canadensis—Fleabane or Whiteweed, from its being white-headed like an old man. It is good for some cases of dysentery.

Mr. Sexton's lectures, this week, fully equalled our expectations. He is evidently a deep thinker, a student and reader in all branches of literature and science, with a memory that is in itself a priceless treasure, and an excellent faculty for imparting knowledge. The weather has been threatening each evening, but the churches were filled to their utmost capacity.

The Town Treasurer has lately had several town orders presented to him, which he declined to pay, because the parties in whose favor said orders were drawn had not paid their tax. A town ordinance forbids the Treasurer paying orders under such circumstances. Business men should make a note of this, and accept no order unless satisfied that all taxes have been paid. In fact, there is no need of negotiating town or school orders, as there is always money in the treasury to pay the orders upon presentation.

The tax duplicate for 1887 is now in the Collector's hands. The Collector has sixty days in which to deliver the bills, and long before that time expects each tax-payer will know how much he has to pay. In the meantime, you can call at the office and settle, if you wish.

It is reported that the horse disease is abating,—probably because every known precaution is being taken to prevent its spread. Do not relax your care,—keep stables thoroughly clean and disinfected, and be careful about overworking your horses. Very likely the first frosts will destroy the disease germs.

We spent Thursday in Philadelphia, and witnessed the grand civic and industrial parade, which was nearly six hours in passing a point. It was too grand an exhibition for a description in our columns. Members of the Atlantic County Bar met in the Court House Tuesday afternoon, and glowing tributes were paid to the memory of the late Harry L. Slape by members, including Judge Reed, who presided. The following was adopted:

Forasmuch as it has seemed fitting to him who is above and beyond the grave, to be remembered by all law, to take from us our late brother, Harry L. Slape, who are left with to put in lasting shape some slight mark of our recognition of his work and ability as a lawyer as well as his private attributes of generosity and gentility as a comrade and friend; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the removal by death of Harry L. Slape the bar of the county, as well as the State of New Jersey, have lost a brilliant and valuable member.

Resolved, That all dissonance and personal differences having sunk with the coffin in his grave, we only remember of our late associate his kindness, his courage, his indefatigability as a student, his skill and eloquence as an advocate.

Resolved, That, endowed by nature with great talent, he has not suffered it to be buried in a napkin, but with energetic ardor had so developed and increased it that, even in his youth, and borne away before his prime, his power was felt and respected wherever his professional duties called him.

Resolved, That as his charity, while most liberal, was of the kind that let not the right hand know what the left is doing, we find in this element of his character one worthy of our own emulation, and that, as the noblest of virtues, we have good assurance that he carried it an all-prevailing passport in his last journey.

Resolved, That sympathizing from the heart with his family in their loss we will cherish with pleasure the memory of his many admirable qualities and attainments, and sincerely commend them to those who shall come after us, to be sought, battled for and won.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Circuit Court, and that the press of the county is hereby requested to publish them, and that the Clerk of this Court forward a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

CHINESE PECULIARITIES.

Kinks in the Ways of Life in the Celestial Empire.

The highest ambition of a Chinese gentleman is to have a nice coffin and a fine funeral.

Old women instead of young are the idols of society.

Love-making is done only three days before marriage. It is not only considered the safest way to get ahead of a rival, but the surest way to get a wife without losing much time.

A previous acquaintance between the male and female prevents them from marriage. For this reason a man seldom weds a girl of his own town.

A man could borrow money on the strength of his having a son, but no one would advance him a cent, if he had a dozen daughters. The former is responsible for the debts of his father for three generations. The latter is only responsible for the debts of her husband.

When a Chinaman meets another he shakes and squeezes his own hands, covers his head. If great friends had not seen each other for a long time, after the mutual handshaking they would rub shoulders until they become tired. Instead of asking each other's health, they would say, "Have you eaten your rice? Where are you going? What is your business when you get there? How old are you, and how much did you pay for your shoes?"

Men wear long petticoats and carry fans, while the women wear short jackets and carry canes.

Boats are drawn by horses; carriages moved by sails.

Old men play ball and fly kites, while children fold their arms and look on.

If a Chinaman desires the death of an enemy he goes and hangs himself upon his neighbor's door. It is a sure cure to kill not only that particular enemy, but members of his entire family will be in jeopardy of losing their lives.

When a Chinaman desires a visitor to dine with him he does not ask him to do so, but when he does not wish him to stay he puts the question, "O, please stay and dine with me?" The visitor will then know he is not wanted.

A rich man's servant gets no salary, yet many are the applicants, while big salaries are paid to the servants of the common people, but few make applications. The perquisites of the common people are the sole reasons of these differences.

When a Chinaman expects a present and it does not come he sends one of lesser value.

To encourage honesty and sincerity confidential clerks and salesmen in all branches of industries receive an annual percentage of the firm's business besides their regular salary.

A Proud Spirit Broken.

A settler who had had bad luck financially was finally taken sick. A friend called to see him and said to his wife:

"It was surprised to hear of your husband's sickness. I thought he was a remarkable strong and healthy."

"Yes, John was always very healthy, but he got so discouraged at last that it just made him sick."

"But he was always of such a cheerful and buoyant disposition I never expected to see him get sick this way."

"Yes, John was always a mighty grumpy. When the barn burnt up he killed the new team he never said a word about it, but he was built another barn, and got another team."

"Yes, I remember he did."

"Then when the house burnt he didn't complain a bit, but went to living in a tent just as cheerful."

"I know it."

"When the farm was sold on a mortgage the children were all took sick John kept right up as happy as ever."

"Yes, that's so."

"By the way the sheriff took the cow and cook stove, and a wagon run over John's foot and smashed it, but still he didn't seem to be a bit discouraged."

"I know he didn't."

"Then the oldest girl run away and married a corn doctor, both our horses died, John got beat on a law suit and fell down and broke his leg. Still he held his head right up and said he'd come out on top yet."

"Yes, well, what was it that could possibly have occurred to break his spirit and make him sick at last?"

"He had to sell his old dog for fifty cents to get money to buy a new one. The man just bought him for his hide and nothing else we knew it just as soon as John saw the man the old dog under the wagon he came right in and threw himself on the bed and says he, 'Samanthy, that's about to stand—won't never get off this bed a live one.' I reckon I won't be long forlorn, him—you order seen the way old John could take a hog by the ear and swing it right around in a circle."

Inhalation of insect (Dalmatian) powder is assigned as a cause of a young man's death at Hills, N. H.

The story of Rip Van Winkle has been found by Professor Basil Hall Chamberlain in the native Japanese folk-lore.

ANTELOPE GETTING SCARCER.

The Game Going Down Before the Guns of the Hunters—Baby Antelope.

"Your city people who want sport and never do anything but fish a little in the small stream near by, ought to come up to Fort Bidwell," said Jonathan Caplin to a reporter.

"There is the biggest lot of antelope north of Fort Bidwell and beyond the Oregon line I ever saw, very pretty and they are as fat as beautiful fawn skins and graceful carriage."

"It's almost a pity to kill them, but they do it. It won't be long till the antelope, like the buffalo, will have to take a back seat. There won't be any left. Nowhere else in California are antelope now to be found, and nowhere contiguous to the state but the plains of eastern Oregon. But the latter region is, or much of it, already just like the great American desert. It looks as though it was too great in extent and too barren to ever be anything else but the home of prairie dogs, wolves and these antelopes."

"We know enough about the progress of the country generally, though, to know that this cannot be. Water will be brought on the land; it will be antelope, like the buffalo, will have to take a back seat. There won't be any left. Nowhere else in California are antelope now to be found, and nowhere contiguous to the state but the plains of eastern Oregon. But the latter region is, or much of it, already just like the great American desert. It looks as though it was too great in extent and too barren to ever be anything else but the home of prairie dogs, wolves and these antelopes."

"There are indeed a great many antelope there. Two weeks ago I saw four or five bands while crossing over from Oregon in a wagon. There were as many as twenty or thirty together in some of the droves. In others there were from seven to a dozen."

"There is no difficulty about seeing plenty of them. We killed three and had the best antelope steak to eat you ever saw. We only saved out the best meat."

"There have been a good many killed lately—partly for sport, partly to use meat. I don't think the skins have been saved at all."

"There are some of the finest little antelope there you ever saw—little bits of delicate, graceful things only a couple of months old. Very pretty, too, they are. A fawn or a lamb doesn't begin to impress you the way one of these cunning little antelopes does. Women go about them when they see them. Perhaps there is no living thing, barling a little child, that they are so taken with as a baby antelope."

"There have always been lots of antelope near the Nevada line and out toward Idaho, but I think the last winter must have been unusually good for them, else there wouldn't be so many. There seems to be a great many more than during any single year for some time past."

"If there is any law against killing them I have never heard of it, and no body pays any attention to it, anyhow. I think it wouldn't be a bad plan if there was such a law, because there is now too scarce on the continent, generally speaking, to have them killed off."

A Japanese Flower Show.

The chrysanthemum is the Japanese national flower, and is so esteemed that the Mikado has created an Order of the Chrysanthemum, which he bestows upon men of distinction at home and abroad. Recently there was an exhibition of chrysanthemums at the Mikado's palace.

At the door of the imperial gardens, a servant resplendent in gilt robes, inspected one's card of admission carefully and then pointed out the direction of the pavilion where the flowers were on exhibition. The imperial garden has many winding paths with little streams overhung by shady bamboos, and takes flowers in the spring, magnificent lotus flowers are in bloom; but nothing is in order here. Beyond were the large ponds, and here we found all the furnishings to be European, with easy-chairs, canopies and carpets. A military band played air that were familiar to us. The Japanese officers were their most brilliant uniforms, of European style, for the Emperor and Empress were expected. The civil functionaries wore their traditional European black coats, and carried tall hats.

"The Japanese ladies were almost all dressed in European costume. A few, indeed, had preserved the picturesque national costume, and this seemed to me to prove their patriotism to be a strong type; for when the Empress arrived, which she did presently, she was dressed in a magnificent crimson dress if the latest Parisian style. She is a woman of elegant appearance and great linguistic manner."

"The Emperor was in the uniform of the Guard, which is neither very handsome nor very military. His face was impassive. He responded with but the slightest movement of the head to the profound bows that were made to him."

"The chrysanthemum by their size and the variety of their colors, proved to be real wonders, and well worthy of the preference which the Japanese give them over all other flowers. Under one of the trees, and under a big tree, the competition between the flowers was so keen, that there were three or four specimens bearing respectively one hundred and fifty, one hundred and twenty, and three hundred and thirty-three separate stems in full bloom."

"The romance of this strange exhibition was so strangely marred by the presence everywhere of the tall silk hats which the Japanese have borrowed from us, and which become very badly."

A COLORED GENTLEMAN applied to Col. Yerger, of Austin, Tex., for employment.

"Have you any references from your former employers?" asked Col. Yerger.

"Yes, I have, boss. I've worked under all the superintendents of the railroads for the last ten years, and I've been with the best of 'em, and I've done the best of 'em."

"What's your name?"

"I'm John Smith, boss."

So English, You Know.

Yes, I agree with you that English people are capable, somehow, of the frankest bad manners in the world.

"They are, but they are not the only ones. I have seen a number of the funny story of a young man who was out for a tour among us awhile ago. Mr. and Mrs. ———— They are both, you know, pure characters, both literary, and both of them, long, arched, thin, and slender nose, thin straight lips, and good teeth, his forehead high and wide, and his eyes, too, good, and one of the 'nature's gentlemen' who needs only the anthropological scale. His neighbor, the Uzi, is less pleasing in appearance, has a darker skin, and more of the 'animal' about him."

TRIBES OF ASIATIC RUSSIA.

Types of Mankind Not Pleasing to European Eyes—Goidi and Gilyaks.

Speaking generally of the tribes of Asiatic Russia, it will be anticipated that they differ widely from one another in appearance. When in the bazaars of Turkistan, one meets with the most grotesque of human types, with skin, abundant beard, long, arched, thin, and slender nose, thin straight lips, and good teeth, his forehead high and wide, and his eyes, too, good, and one of the 'nature's gentlemen' who needs only the anthropological scale. His neighbor, the Uzi, is less pleasing in appearance, has a darker skin, and more of the 'animal' about him."
