Why Don't "they" Stop It?

"Why don't the town authorities put a quietus on the lawless boys who are doing as they please?" Why don't "they" arrest them? The town authorities (the "they") authorized me to arrest the boys. The complaint and warrant are ready; the Justice is ready to enforce the law. I have spent two days seeking for evidence. Everybody wants the boys arrested, but no one is willing to give evidence. They know all about the lawlessness, and wish to know why "they" do not stop it, but when I ask them what they know about it,—nothing.

One man said he drove the boys away from his place several times. When I asked who they were, he didn't know; yet he sees them every day, and even drove them away "several times."

These boys have placed poles across the sidewalk at night, to trip pedestrians; they have taken positions where they could make remarks at passers by; have acted disorderly and thrown stones at a citizen's house before his eyes; they have had "drunken carnivals" behind the Episcopal Church, at night; they have pitched quoits on Sunday; they have attacked persons on the highway when coming out of a place of entertainment; they have stoned railroad cars and charged it to bicycle riders; they have insulted ladies riding in the cars (the Penna. R. R. Co. have had detectives here to look into it); they threatened violence to any who informed on them; yet they go unpunished, and citizens encourage them by being too cowardly to assist the authorities who are ready, willing, and anxious to break up this gang of toughs now terrorizing the town.

In some communities there would have been vigilance committees to ensure arrest and conviction, to assist the authorities; but here we have citizens who actually refuse to state what they know, and who are driving respectable people out of town who will not live in it under such lawless conditions.

It will cost no one even a penny to inform me of facts. I have done my best, and my greatest obstacles are the "good, law-abiding people," those who know enough to send every one of the gang to jail, but who are too cowardly to do their duty, though on the street they loudly berate somebody because "they" don't stop the lawlessness.

I have no exalted opinion of those who declined, last Thursday, when I plead with them to give me facts, and even uttered falsehoods by stating that they did not know who the boys were, and knew nothing about the matter. I called on about twenty citizens, all "good law-abiding people," who want to be "protected" by the town.

Cutting Cow Peas.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN: I am cutting cow peas now, sown after strawberries turned under, and this year's experience convinces me that for fodder they should be sowed 1 1/2 bushels to the acre, as with a rank and one bushel to the acre the stalks are too coarse. They made a heavy growth, and when about two feet high a heavy thunder shower laid them flat in many places, and they could not recover their uprightness, but grew on a foot and a half or more and tied themselves all together at the top. Altogether, it is impossible for any mowing machine to cut them, and a man must be a dextrous mower to cut a quarter acre in a day with a scythe. Their shade is so dense that no weeds or crab-grass could grow, while part of the field adjoining, which I did not plow up but hoed three times and finally gave up to weeds on account of so much rain, would not cut a heavy swath of crab-grass.

So they are a fine crop to follow straw berries, and to be followed by hot, dry weather they do not winch in the least, although the land is sandy and right for sweet potatoes. A piece of crimson clover adjoining them, sowed July 16, is wilted and drying up, although the season was never before so favorable, and may not be for a long time again, for getting a catch of this catch-crop. On heavier land the clover is fine, 4 to 6 inches high and does not wilt, though in a peach orchard. This shows that where the land is too light for clover we can fall back on peas with assured success.

I hand you an article in the Practical Farmer, by Prof. W. F. Massey, Director of the North Carolina Experiment Station, at Raleigh. In it he gives his opinion as to the best time to turn under cow peas, a question which has been puzzling some of our farmers. It is, in part, in answer to my letter to him on that subject. P. H. BROWN.

[We'll try to publish at least a part of the article next week.—ED.]

The right of citizenship has been, and is, too cheaply held in the United States. If the naturalization laws had been properly framed, the voting population of this state would have been smaller by many thousands than it is to-day, to the manifest advantage of good government. The loose methods of naturalization which have prevailed in this and most of the other states are responsible for a vast deal of political corruption and chicanery.

If foreign countries want Uncle Sam to legislate in their interest, they must wait until the Republican party is voted out of power.

The only thing which we never forgive in each other is a difference of opinion.

THIRTY-NINE YEARS IN BED.

Queer Whim of an Englishwoman Who Has Just Died.

A splinter died last week at Teignmouth, Devonshire, the first thirty-nine years in bed of a woman.

One evening in the year 1858, being then in her 35th year, and in perfect health, she retired as usual to her room, leaving her maid to lock the door.

From that day until the day upon which she was placed in her coffin last week, she never got up again, although remaining to within a few months of her death in the best of health. For two years she lay in an upstairs room, but for the last thirty-seven her bed was placed in one on the ground floor, commanding the entrance to the house and grounds.

From this vantage point, by an ingenious arrangement of mirrors, she could see everything that went on around the house and in the garden, and she was never known to become so acute that she could see inside the four walls which encased her attention.

Neither the death of her father nor the death of her mother, which took place after she had retired for this long rest, operated to alter her resolution.

At the latter's death she found herself possessor of the property. She had the house picked up at 6 o'clock every night and the keys put on a table at her bedside. She proved an excellent woman of business, transacting all her affairs, managing her servants, entertaining her guests and revising her visiting list, without turning a counterpane, so to speak. Neither did she change her diet in any way, but, despite her recumbent habit of life, continued to eat her usual meals, dining at 8 and consuming such things as ducks, game, peaches, pork and all things indigestible and taking her coffee and liquors regularly all her life.

Doctors visited her, but she had no need of their prescriptions, and it was only a few months ago that the effects of her extraordinary manner of life began to be visible. Then she gradually broke up. The medical men who made a postmortem examination of her remains found her heart and lungs were free from disease, so that she had led an ordinary existence she would in all probability have lived for another ten or fifteen years.

At the age of 77, she weighed nearly sixteen stone, and the coffin in which she was buried was considered the largest ever made in South Devon. She was no more than five feet high, and her body was as plump as a baby.

The Baby's Bottle of Rum. The inflexibility of Russian official orders has resulted in many queer and comical incidents.

The story is well known of the country who was put on guard over a rose in bloom in the imperial garden in the seventeenth century. The rose and its bush disappeared, but every day for a hundred years a sentry posted guard over the spot, because no one dared to touch the service disinfectant.

A story quite as ludicrous is now told of a discovery made by the Empress Catharine, mother of the Emperor Paul, who was assassinated in 1801. Catharine, at one time, was inspired by some passing whim of economy to ascertain the ingredients of the Imperial accounts. In them, among other things, she found that "one bottle of rum daily" was charged to the Naslednik, or heir apparent.

As her son, who was then a young man, had never given any sign of being temperate habits, the Empress was greatly astonished. She went over the accounts to see how long he had been addicted to the practice, and found, to her still greater surprise, that the expenditure went back to the day of his birth—and indeed, far beyond it.

The heir to the throne had not only been charged with drinking over thirty dozen bottles of the famous rum yearly ever since he was born, but for a long time before that. The Empress, it is hardly necessary to say, made a thorough investigation of the matter, and with the aid of an accountant, who at last reached the original entry.

A century or so before, the Imperial physician had prescribed for the Naslednik of the period, "an amount of a violent tonic, a teaspoonful of rum, to be taken with sugar." This dose was given for several days in succession, and the rum was afterwards in charge, and had deemed it more fitting to the Imperial dignity, as well as more profitable to himself or herself, to purchase a new bottle of the tonic.

One day even given the order to discontinue this purchase, and it had gone on for a century, the rum having constituted one of the perquisites of the court steward.

The Empress substituted the discovery to her husband, who at once declared that the method of keeping the accounts should be thoroughly reformed, and much abuse ended. He carried out his threat.

HOUSE ON WHEELS.

Onions Vehicle in Which Jonathan Olson Will Go Around the World.

An ingenious citizen of Altoona, Pa., has built an elaborate wagon for himself and family, in which he proposes to make a trip around the world.

His name is Jonathan Olson, and he intends to start on his long journey this summer, and to finish it by the first of June, 1897. He will first go to Illinois, and then strike south to Texas, crossing across the Gulf of Mexico to South America, he will take a steamer thence to Spain. From this point the American travelers will start on their long wagon trip.

In fitting out his house on wheels, Olson has shown rare taste. He has finished the inside in polished maple, and has adorned it with hand-carved beautiful pieces of brass-work, which he now turns to the adornment of his wagon house. The interior of the house, besides having three rooms, is well equipped in every particular. In one room the family cook and had a fireplace, they dine there also. But the dining room is out of doors when the wagon can be pulled up in a pleasant place.

Fire does not trouble the Olson family, for the trees and a good cook drink oil-waxed from a spring. The second room has a couch and a small table. The table can be used for a breakfast tray or it can be cleared away and used for parlor games. It also does duty as writing table, or for books and a smoking set. On one side of the room there is a dressing table, which takes up the entire wall. It has twelve drawers, a broad shelf and a mirror with shelves overhead. Here are stored the family wardrobe and hatbox.

In pleasant weather there is no sleeping done in the house. Hammocks are hung under trees and the family "camp out." The third room is a general store room. Here the hammocks are kept, and here chairs are stored and tables piled up. Anything that is wanted can be brought from the storehouse at a moment's notice. There is one chest devoted to dress goods, another to bed linen and useful articles for wear and for fancy work. The wagon can stop at a town any time to replenish supplies, but the owner plans to travel with an exception for food, there need be no halt for a month at a time.

Provisions are purchased of the farmers, who, it is expected, will supply butter, eggs, vegetables and chickens cheap in return for the privilege of looking through the novel house. The kitchen is one of the best rooms of all, for it is arranged shipshape. Cups are hung from hooks and plates set in the grooves. Pans are on the walls, and everything is polished bright. The floors are plain boards, laid nicely, the oil, so that the rooms look as neat as those in any house. "The cabin" or living room has the look of a stateroom on a yacht, and this effect is heightened by some very clever wall decorations made from strips of wood skillfully laid.

The ingenious arrangement of all is a sliding door, by which the whole side of the house can be opened. The doors slide to one side, and finally come completely open, so that the wagon can be pulled up to the shore and used for tables under the trees.

Olson will travel with three horses, one pulling one by hitching it to the back of the cart. When the wagon is closed it does not look like any other wagon. It is longer and broader, and has a more elevated appearance.

As you say, "begin the moderately low barrier," that he speculated on a large scale exclusively. May I inquire what was the use of this large scale?

"To answer you," replied the cheerful little man, "I have been fighting the consequences."—Judge's Journal.

"A three-way." The Empress substituted the discovery to her husband, who at once declared that the method of keeping the accounts should be thoroughly reformed, and much abuse ended. He carried out his threat.

A CITY IN A VOLCANO.

The Picturesque and Peculiar City of Saba, in the West Indies.

If you will take down your geographical map and look on the map of the West Indies, you will notice, between the islands of Santa Cruz and St. Christopher, two small islands which, unless your map is an unusually large and complete one, will have no names given.

These two islands belong to the Dutch, and the most northerly and westerly of them is called Saba.

The Dutch are noted for their old-fashioned customs and for their peculiarities. Holland has, sometimes, been called the "Land of Pinks," but I doubt if anywhere in all their possessions have these curious people shown their eccentricities more than in the little out-of-the-way island of Saba.

The island is small, its greatest diameter being not over two and one-half miles, and it is nothing more than an isolated rock, rising out of the sea. The sides are very steep and high, rising in places for a sheer 2,000 feet. There is no harbor, no beach, no safe anchorage, and no large trees on the island. Although Saba has a population of over 2,500, yet you might sail all around it without seeing any signs of houses or settlements. If you wished to land, or "go aboard," as the Sables say, you would have to do so on a sailing boat on the southern side of the island; and here you would find a steep, winding flight of stone steps leading up the rocky mountain side.

At the foot of the mountain side, a few houses are scattered, and a small harbor is formed by the waves of the sea. The houses are built on the steep slopes, and are of a peculiar style, with a thatched roof and a small porch. On every side by towering peaks and precipitous cliffs, with beautiful trees, palms, bananas, and wild plants. This little town, the only one on the island, is known as "The Bottom"—a curious name, surely; but it is well named, for the town is built on the bottom of the crater of an extinct volcano.

Descending the slope into this quiet spot of quietude, you find the streets very narrow, and the houses are built on the steep slopes, and are of a peculiar style, with a thatched roof and a small porch. The popularity of golf grows yearly in England. This fact is plainly shown by the immense increase in the quantity and variety of the literature of the subject. The "Golfing Annual," which has been issued in London, is a volume containing some 100 pages. It is the tenth of its kind, and as it has grown in size and circulation every year since its first issue it would seem that the prophetic of old men were not correct in their prognostic. For years ago, when the game first began to be popular in England, there was no end to the people who predicted that it would be a fad.

WENT LIKE HOT CAKES.

Saw a Legislature Get Out of a Zoo of a Connecticut Reporter.

An ex-member of the Legislature had a very large stock of State agricultural reports in good-sized volumes piled up at Superior street, and his associates in the profession who occupy the same apartment crowded the books a good deal of an eyesore. The ex-member himself is no longer an active member of the room, having been elected to a highly honorable position, and so, to his chagrin, one of the associates determined to dispose of the books in the simplest manner known, aside from total destruction. In short, he determined to give them away.

Even that method he was afraid might be a little difficult to carry out, but he went to a neighboring tenant, who is clever with the marking brush, and said:

"Want you kindly fix me up some kind of a card that will attract attention to a lot of agricultural reports I want to give away? Something sort of 'Barnyard' style. Inside History of Sunday Bazaar, or 'The Farmer's Friend,' or 'The Ruralist,' or anything that will draw a crowd."

"All right," said the neighbor, and at once set to work. In a few minutes he had a card ready. It was a work of art in large and picturesque capital letters, and this is the way it read:

ALL ABOUT AGRICULTURE!

Saw a Legislature Get Out of a Zoo of a Connecticut Reporter.

An ex-member of the Legislature had a very large stock of State agricultural reports in good-sized volumes piled up at Superior street, and his associates in the profession who occupy the same apartment crowded the books a good deal of an eyesore. The ex-member himself is no longer an active member of the room, having been elected to a highly honorable position, and so, to his chagrin, one of the associates determined to dispose of the books in the simplest manner known, aside from total destruction. In short, he determined to give them away.

Even that method he was afraid might be a little difficult to carry out, but he went to a neighboring tenant, who is clever with the marking brush, and said:

"Want you kindly fix me up some kind of a card that will attract attention to a lot of agricultural reports I want to give away? Something sort of 'Barnyard' style. Inside History of Sunday Bazaar, or 'The Farmer's Friend,' or 'The Ruralist,' or anything that will draw a crowd."

"All right," said the neighbor, and at once set to work. In a few minutes he had a card ready. It was a work of art in large and picturesque capital letters, and this is the way it read:

License Voted.

We have vigorously opposed the granting of a license to sell liquor in Hammonont, and shall continue our opposition by voice, vote, and pen whenever opportunity offers. We have lived in all sorts of communities, from a village of two thousand inhabitants, with nine saloons of various grades, to a large city with its hundreds of licensed hotels and grog-shops; but we have yet to know of one point of benefit any community has derived from the sale of rum that was not more than cancelled by the evils resulting therefrom. Every other business, trade, or occupation produces something of value, while the liquor traffic's products are degradation to its patrons, a lowering of the general moral tone of a community; it fosters vice, increases poverty and crime, and returns nothing but possibly a trifle of money toward paying increased police and court expenses.

They say that liquor is sold here without license. We have no reason to doubt it; but the dealer is an outlaw; he is subject to betrayal any day, by any one who chooses; his nefarious business is not legalized, is not protected by law; his bills cannot be collected in our courts. He is a law-breaker, and may sooner or later suffer the penalty. So we would have him remain, an outlaw.

But the powers that be—our Town Council—have made license legal, and we regret the fact. They can now license whom they choose, and when they will, with no provision for regulating the traffic. Some say the Council can cancel a license at any time, if the dealer violates State law. Perhaps so; but we doubt it. Watch the court records, and see how seldom this is done; and if done, it requires quite as strong evidence as is needed to convict a party of keeping a speak-easy; and Hammonont knows by experience that this is not readily done.

No, we are not satisfied with Council's action; and in reply to the question "What are you going to do about it?" will only say that we propose to keep the issue alive, and do all in our power to elect, next March, a Town Council which will promptly repeal the license ordinance, and take energetic measures to suppress the liquor traffic. It again defied, we shall suffer less damage than those who engage in the business, or others who buy the accursed stuff.

Anti-Gambling Amendment.

The following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of New Jersey, having been passed by two consecutive Legislatures of this State, is now submitted to the people for adoption or rejection:

Amend Paragraph 2 of Sec. VII of Article IV, so as to read as follows: 2. No lottery shall be authorized by the Legislature or otherwise in this State; and no ticket in any lottery shall be bought or sold within this State, nor shall pool-selling, book-making or gambling of any kind be authorized or allowed within this State, nor shall any gambling device, practice or game of chance now prohibited by law be legalized, or the remedy, penalty or punishment now provided therefor be in any way diminished.

The submission of this amendment is the outcome of a determined purpose and a prolonged effort on the part of thousands of good citizens of New Jersey to rid the State forever of the evils of gambling upon race tracks, which have so disgraced it in the past.

If this amendment receives, at the approaching election, Sept. 28th, a majority of the votes cast, this purpose will be most effectually accomplished. If it is defeated, not only will all thus far gained be lost, but the reactionary effect of such defeat will surely bring upon our State all the evils of the past in multiplied form and increased magnitude. The possibility of such defeat is fostered not in the fact that a majority of the voters of New Jersey are in favor of restoring race track gambling, but in the apathy and indifference of the friends of the amendment. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that every friend of this amendment who has a vote to cast should realize his personal responsibility in this matter, so that he shall be spared, in case of its defeat, a vain regret for having neglected to do his duty.

I trust assured, you who are in sympathy with this effort to secure a great and permanent reform, that the owners of the race tracks, and the gamblers—being brought now to the last ditch in the long battle—will not surrender without a severe—although possibly a hidden—effort to compass the defeat of this amendment. They have the incentive of self-interest, the control of large funds, and, to a certain extent, political influence.

New Jersey men and women, arouse reform: give heart, and hand and voice to the work of passing out a strong vote; and over and above all, do we earnestly entreat every qualified voter who believes that race-track gambling is essentially, and has proven itself to be, a curse to our fair commonwealth, not to fail to cast his ballot for the above amendment on the 28th day of this month. We are confident that if this shall be done, a great and glorious victory awaits our cause.

Proposed Amendments TO THE Constitution.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

As required by an act entitled "An act to provide for submitting proposed amendments to the Constitution of this State to the people thereof," approved May 25, 1897, notice is hereby given that on TUESDAY, the twenty-eighth day of September, 1897,

A Special Election will be held in the several election districts or precincts of this State, at such places as the clerks of the several townships, cities, and municipalities of the State shall provide, to enable the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature to vote for or against each of the following proposed amendments to the Constitution.

Proposed amendment to the constitution, relating to interior and gambling.

Amend paragraph 2 of Section VII of Art. IV, so as to read as follows:

2. No lottery shall be authorized by the Legislature or otherwise in this State; and no ticket in any lottery shall be bought or sold within this State, nor shall any pool-selling, book-making, or gambling of any kind be authorized or allowed within this State, nor shall any gambling device, practice, or game of chance law prohibited by law be legalized, or the remedy, penalty or punishment now provided therefor be in any way diminished.

Proposed amendment to the constitution, relating to appointments to office.

Add the following to art. XII of art. V: No person who shall have been nominated to the senate by the governor for any office of trust or profit under the government of this State, and shall not have been confirmed before the recess of the legislature, shall be eligible for appointment to such office during the continuance of such recess.

Proposed amendment to the constitution, providing for woman suffrage.

ARTICLE II.
Amend section 1 to read as follows:

1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of this State one year and of the county of which he claims his vote five months next before the election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people; and every female citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of this State one year, and of the county of which she claims her vote five months next before said meeting, shall be entitled to vote at any school meeting held in any school district of this State in which she may reside for members of boards of education and other school officers that now are or hereafter may be elected at such meetings; provided, that no person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident of this State by being stationed in any garrison, barracks, or military or naval place or station within this State; and no pauper, idiot, or insane person or person convicted of a crime which now excludes him or her from being a witness, unless pardoned or restored by law to the right of suffrage, shall enjoy the right of an elector; and provided further, that in time of war no elector in the actual military service of the State, or of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from such election district; and the legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent elector may vote, and for the return and canvass of their vote in the election district in which they respectively reside.

Local Reminiscences of 1865.

WRITTEN FROM THE BOOK OF MEMORY BY WILLIAM D. PACKER.

Hammonton was then and for many years truly an American settlement, composed of families mostly from the New England and Middle States, largely artists, merchants and mechanics. Its census of inhabitants was then about equal to its census of children of school age in 1897. Its social, moral, and religious status, its regard for law and order, for candor, honesty and sincerity, and respect for each others' rights and privileges, were not, in my opinion, surpassed by any community. For many years its politics were very largely Republican, while its temperance principles were known and understood both at home and abroad.

The new settler had many hardships to endure, many sacrifices to make. In taking new land from the brush and stump, and preparing it for cultivation, there were many nice and difficult points to determine, and each man had his own ideas concerning the different varieties of plants and fertilizers. There were many pests to contend with,—weeds of all varieties and simply sufficient in quantity; bugs and worms adapted to every plant, requiring eternal vigilance to outwit and overcome, with now and then a mosquito to accompany you by day and sing to you by night. It was no wonder that some gave up the struggle and retired in disgust. But the majority remained, built up nice homes, and raised families to succeed them. Although it is an assured fact in nature that life and death, growth and decay, must pass upon all men and things, yet it is sad to think that the generation of the sixties has so nearly passed on to a continued existence in accord with the moral, intellectual, and spiritual grade to which they had attained while passing. These homes are now occupied by descendants of the first settlers, or in many cases have been sold to settlers from a foreign soil.

I came to Hammonton July 8th, 1865, and took up my residence in the "L" part of the hotel building owned by Mr. Ellis, and kept by different parties for transient boarders until bought by E. J. Woolley and fitted by him for the jeweller's business. This was for many years the emporium for books, stationery, notions, and Christmas goods. In '88 or '89 the old building was moved, and by chance is yet the old couple's home, while the three-story brick built upon its site has passed into a new form of chemical combination—as matter in its evolutions knows no loss,—and yet another similar building has arisen, Phoenix-like, from the ashes.

Hammonton roads were not then as now, but very much what nature and travel had made them. I had occasion to go to the post-office, on Main Road, for a letter, and found the sidewalk a tiresome crooked dog-path, with brush and weeds. But, as a relief, I met Mr. W. F. Bassett, hauling out one of his earliest babies, and Mr. Ezra Packard, who gave me an interesting account of their earlier struggles. Its school-houses were two,—one at Main and Pine Rds, which with improvements and repairs serves a good purpose yet for the mixed race of children in that section. The other building was on Third Street, adjoining Mr. Frank Crowell's land. This was later sold and converted into a dwelling-house, while a larger and more convenient edifice erected in a central location, served its purpose well, but was in turn sold for industrial uses, and the present handsome structure built.

[Mr. Packer has forgotten the Lake school-house, oldest of all.—Ed.]

The Churches were two in '65, both on upper Bellevue,—Baptist and Presbyterian (the latter built that year.) The Methodists worshipped in the hall over Mr. Elvins' store until '68.

The public halls were then three, one owned by Mr. A. G. Clark, now Wm. L. Black's second-floor sales-room; the second owned by father Ellis, and until Union Hall was built occupied by the Spiritualist Society, with Mr. Parkhurst Sr. its President. I well remember on Sunday, July 9th, 1866, the hall was filled to overflow with parents and children, and for years it was a flourishing society; but in course of time, death has claimed some, others called away by business, some by marriage and removal, and some, I am sorry to say, with full knowledge and belief in the facts, phenomena, and science of spiritualism, either staid at home or gravitated to some of the churches, and the children, needing larger social surroundings, went the same way.

Tours to the South via Penna. R. R.

Two very attractive early Autumn tours will be run by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, leaving New York and Philadelphia Sept. 28 and Oct. 12.

It is hardly necessary to say that these outings are planned with the utmost care, and that all arrangements are adjusted so as to afford the best possible means of visiting each place to the best advantage.

The tours each cover a period of eleven days, and include the battlefield of Gettysburg, picturesque Blue Mountain, Luray Caverns, the Natural Bridge, Virginia Hot Springs, the cities of Richmond and Washington, and Mt. Vernon.

The round trip, including all necessary expenses, is $65 from New York, $63 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

Each tour will be in charge of one of the company's tourist agents. He will be assisted by an experienced lady chaperone, whose especial charge will be ladies unaccompanied by male escort.

Special trains of parlor cars are provided for the exclusive use of each party in which the entire round trip from New York is made.

For detailed itinerary apply to ticket agents or to tourist agent, 1196 Broadway, N. Y., or Geo. W. Lloyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.
