A WONDERFUL PUBLICATION.

Many suppose DEMOREST'S MONTHLY to be a fashion magazine. It is a great mistake. In DEMOREST'S you get a dozen magazines in one, and secure amusement and instruction for the whole family. It contains Stories, Poems, and other literary attractions, including Artistic, Scientific, and other hold matters, and is illustrated with original Steel Engravings, Photogravures, Water-Colors, and fine Woodcuts, making it the MOST MAGAZINE OF AMERICA.

Each copy contains a PATTERN. Orders entitling the holder to the selection of ANY PATTERN illustrated in any number of the Magazine, and in ANY OF THE SIZE MANUFACTURED, each valued at from 20 cents to 30 cents, or over $3.00 worth of patterns per year, free.

Yearly subscription, $2.00. A trial will convince you that you can get ten times the value of the money paid. Single copies (each containing Pattern Order), 20 cents.

Constable Bernhouse had a trip to Bridgeton, Monday, and escorted a desperate character to May's Landing for trial. The man had a reputation which prompted the sheriffs of both counties to warn our George that he had serious business on hand; but some men are not easily frightened, and a few earnest words convinced the prisoner that good behavior would be his best policy, and he wore his steel bracelets with becoming modesty, all day, and plead guilty when before the Court.

At their annual meeting, Monday evening, the Fire Company elected the following officers:

President, Wm. Bernhouse.
Vice-Pres't, John T. French.
Secretary, P. H. Jacobs.
Treasurer, W. H. Bernhouse.
Marshal, T. B. Brown.
Foreman, John W. Myers.
Asst. Foreman, John M. Austin.
Trustees, Wayland DePuy, John W. Myers, John M. Austin.
The subject of a Beneficial Association was introduced, and the Marshal instructed to call a meeting to consider the question.

PREPARING FOR OLD AGE.

Dr. Hammond on the Art of Growing Old Gracefully.

The life of a man may be properly divided into three stages—the period of increase, the period of maturity, the period of decline. In the first of these the process of formation is more active than those of destruction; in the second they are about equal; in the third the processes of destruction are more active than those of formation. In this latter stage we have to consider in the present paper.

The period of decline is marked by striking characteristics as these which belong to the period of life. After the body has remained nearly a fixed point of development for a few years, varying from five to ten, a degeneration is manifested toward degeneration. The process of decay becomes more powerful than that of growth, the regeneration of tissues, and in consequence the body not only loses weight from the atrophy of its parts but the functions are less frequently performed. Thus, the action of the heart becomes weaker and less frequent, the respiration slower, the digestion weaker, the muscles thinner, the skin shrunken, the joints stiff, the teeth fall out, the hair becomes gray, the arteries become less elastic, and the body loses its elasticity and becomes less erect than adult age. The whole tendency of the body is to consolidation.

The organs of special sense also become weaker. The eye loses its brilliancy and the sight grows dim and presbyopia; the taste is less acute, and the sense of smell is almost, if not altogether, lost at a comparatively early period.

With these changes the mind also participates. The memory is the first faculty to fail, and the others follow in rapid succession.

If these alterations are gradual and uniform throughout the system, death from old age is the result; but it rarely happens that derangement of some one important function does not produce this result before the general breaking up of the vital principle occurs.

During the first ten or fifteen years the effect of the organism is so slowly decayed that very little inconvenience results, and occasionally we meet with individuals who are able to withstand the tendency to degeneration. A very advanced period of old age is, however, nevertheless progressing, imperceptibly it may be, but surely, to the extinction of that mysterious principle we call life.

Such is the brief outline of some of the conditions which extend the period of decline. The diseases to which it is especially liable are those which are related to the principle organs of life. Apoplexy, paralysis, organic diseases of the heart, and diseases of the large vessels of the liver and kidneys, are frequently encountered.

I have alluded to the changes that ensue in the mind as a consequence of advanced age, but it is not to be supposed that there is a failure of all the mental faculties. Indeed there is during the first ten or fifteen years of this period, an increase in the strength and powers of endurance of the mind, and quite often a failure of all the faculties for several additional years. The judgment, owing to the experience which the individual has obtained in the affairs of life, becomes riper and more unerring; there is a greater power of determining the value of facts, and a disposition to be governed by the emotions.

But after a time the intellect becomes less absorptive of perceptions, and less creative of ideas. The power of mental concentration is diminished. The memory fails; especially in regard to recent occurrences. The imagination loses the vividness and extensive range of youth and maturity, and the judgment becomes feeble and vacillating. The individual begins to rely on others for advice as to his affairs, and little by little he parts with his own will, even in matters of the smallest importance. The emotions no longer have the power to excite them once, and some of them are utterly extinguished. Often, however, a maudlin or fretful condition is developed, which ends with its own expression of tears or rages, never prompting to volitional impulses or producing more than a momentary disturbance.

To all this, however, there are sometimes notable exceptions, but yet not enough to invalidate the law that the period in question is one of decline in fact as well as in name.

Undoubtedly much can be done by the observance of ordinary hygienic rules to retard all these changes and to postpone the inevitable death, but it is none the less certain that many persons live to an advanced old age and in the enjoyment of a fair measure of health who violate every sanitary law, indulge themselves in every excess of the table, they drink alcoholic liquors to excess, they disregard the obligations of chastity, and yet they do not seem to suffer in health, mental or physical. This, however, must be regarded as exceptions to the general rule, and it is quite probable that but for their improper mode of living they would have been in still better condition, and death would have been still further postponed.

Bearing in mind the fact stated in the preceding remarks, it is apparent that there is less demand made upon the organs of life in old age than during either the period of increase or of maturity, and that these organs are less capable of performing their functions than in early, middle, or adult life. It follows, therefore, that, for instance, severely taxed, the stomach, for instance, should receive less food, for its power of digestion has diminished. Severe physical exertion should be avoided, for the muscles, especially the heart, has lost in tone. The man, for instance, who can at thirty run a hundred yards or more with scarcely any acceleration of his pulse or respiration, would run a mile at thirty with great exertion.

But nothing is so conducive for health in old age and the cultivation of a gentle form of mind as not losing interest in the affairs of life. To grow old gracefully is of the best and the most to the interests of time. The mind retains its hold upon matters which have interested it, and loses almost imperceptibly the vigor natural to it. This age, however, the body feels the influence and continues to perform its various functions with a promptitude and efficiency which would be impossible in one imbued with melancholy or with the consciousness that life is fast slipping away.

After the body has remained nearly a fixed point of development for a few years, varying from five to ten, a degeneration is manifested toward degeneration. The process of decay becomes more powerful than that of growth, the regeneration of tissues, and in consequence the body not only loses weight from the atrophy of its parts but the functions are less frequently performed. Thus, the action of the heart becomes weaker and less frequent, the respiration slower, the digestion weaker, the muscles thinner, the skin shrunken, the joints stiff, the teeth fall out, the hair becomes gray, the arteries become less elastic, and the body loses its elasticity and becomes less erect than adult age. The Balance.

When art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. Daniel 5: 27.

BALANCE was the paradise of architecture, and driven out from thence the grandest buildings of modern times are only the evidences of her fall. The site has been selected for the city, two million men were employed in the building of her walls and the building of her works. It was a city sixty miles in circumference. There was a trench all around the city, from which the material for the walls was taken.

THE BUILDING OF THE CITY.

had been dug. There were twenty-five gates on each side of the city, between every two gates a tower of defense springing into the air from each gate on the one side and a street running straight through to the corresponding gate on the other side, so that there were fifty streets fifteen miles long. Through the city ran a branch of the river Euphrates, and it was sometimes overflowed its banks, and to keep it from the ruin of the city a lake was constructed into which the surplus water of the river would run during the time of freshets, and the water was kept in this artificial lake until time of drought, and then the lake would stream down over the city. At either end of the bridge spanning this Euphrates there was a palace, and the palace was a half around, the other palace seven miles and a half around.

THE BALANCE WHICH WEIGH PRINCIPLES.

weighed churches, weigh men, weigh nations, and weigh worlds. What do you say, "is it possible to weigh the world?" Yes. Why, you would think it God put on one side of the balance suspended from the throne of the Alps and the Pyrenees and the Himalayas and Mount Washington, and all the cities of the earth, they would crush it. No! No! The time will come when God will sit down on the white throne and see the world weighed, and on one side will be the world's opportunities, and on the other the world's sins. And God will give the scales, and away will go the opportunities, and God will say to the messengers with the torch: "Burn that world! weighed and found wanting!"

THE BALANCE WHICH WEIGH PRINCIPLES.

weighed churches, weigh men, weigh nations, and weigh worlds. What do you say, "is it possible to weigh the world?" Yes. Why, you would think it God put on one side of the balance suspended from the throne of the Alps and the Pyrenees and the Himalayas and Mount Washington, and all the cities of the earth, they would crush it. No! No! The time will come when God will sit down on the white throne and see the world weighed, and on one side will be the world's opportunities, and on the other the world's sins. And God will give the scales, and away will go the opportunities, and God will say to the messengers with the torch: "Burn that world! weighed and found wanting!"

THE NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, mislabeled news, which daffles the pages of too many city papers.

A National Newspaper,

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

A New Departure.

About March 1st, we expect to offer our customers a higher grade of

Garden Seeds

That have ever been sold here, and will also keep in stock such garden requisites as the demand seems to call for. We propose to increase our facilities for producing

And to have something nice in that line to offer at all times.

Vegetable Plants

Will be a prominent feature: and in all departments of the nursery business we shall keep our usually full assortment, and shall make it an especial point to maintain and

The weather was threatening this week, until Tuesday evening, when we were treated to a furious down-pour of rain, which was continued until Wednesday afternoon. Thursday morning the sun shone beautifully, but mercury stood about fifty, and a bit of a fire was acceptable.

The Debating Society is a success. Quite a number of ladies were present last week Friday evening. The question, "Should women have the right of suffrage?" was discussed. Messrs. G. W. and Henry T. Pressey, Conkey, French, Thayer, and Jacobs participated; and the question was continued. It is an excellent place to spend an evening.

Rev. E. Cornet's illustrated lecture on the Johnstown flood was not patronized as well as it deserved. The pictures, mostly photographs taken on the spot, were so well presented that we seemed to be standing off and looking at the actual objects, giving one a much better idea of the great disaster. If the exhibition should be repeated, after a time, we hope the hall will be filled.
