An Old Temperance Pledge.

Perhaps it may not generally be known, says an exchange, that twelve former Presidents of the United States appended their names to the following "temperance declaration"—

Being satisfied, from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirits as a drink is not only needless, but harmful, and that the entire abstinence of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue, and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction that, should the people of the United States, and especially the young men, discontinue entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own benefit, but the good of the country and the world." The Presidents signing were: Andrew Jackson, James Madison, John Quincy Adams, Martin Van Buren, John Tyler, James K. Polk, Zachary Taylor, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan, Abraham Lincoln, and Andrew Johnson.

An Autumn Vacation.

GLENORA, N. Y. Sept. 14, 1900.

I left Hammonton on the evening of the 10th for a trip to Seneca Lake, N. Y., remaining in Camden over night so that I might get the first train out from Broad Street Station on Tuesday morning. I took the shady side of the car, and winding along through the hundreds of coaches which were as thick as flies on a molasses cask, we seemed to have run many miles before we reached the country. The beauty, and wonderful genius displayed in beautifying the landscape, gave me a theme for reflection on the mysteries of life.

But how all this is marred by the terrible drouth prevailing so extensively over the country. After passing Lancaster County, the effect of the long hot dry weather was seen everywhere. Forest trees were dying, fields looked as though fire had run over them; streams had dried up, and the scorching wind which blew fiercely all day added its influence to increase the deadly work. The water in the Susquehanna, along the bank of which we kept for many miles, was exceedingly low, and some of its tributaries had not water enough to turn a sewing machine. From Williamsport, up the Locoming Valley, the creek looked more like a trout brook than a large stream of water, as it usually is. When we came to the fruit growing section of the Empire State, leaves were wilted and forest trees were shedding their foliage. Road beds were like ashes. In some localities there are fine grapes, peaches, plums, and pears. Wednesday morning's wind removed much fruit from the trees, and thousands of bushels of apples are on the ground in some orchards.

This is the third year of drought, and farmers say their trees will never fully recover. Wells are dry, and people are carrying water from Seneca Lake for household uses. Vegetables suffer also, cows give less milk, and butter must be higher in price.

I went to my room window, Thursday morning, overlooking the lake, here 1½ miles wide. It is nearly 30 miles long, and mostly within the focus of the eye, and a prettier sight can hardly be imagined. I gazed in "wonder, love and praise." Since Wednesday, the weather has been more comfortable; in fact, blankets have been comfortable at night, and overcoats are worn.

I am well, and this atmosphere is so invigorating that I thought I was a boy again, but after climbing these hills, "so lofty and so great," that feeling was dispelled, and I found I had the same old hulk.

TWO LOVERS.

"How baby is loveliest?"
Mother's own.
All round the world—north, south, east, Here alone!
For whether it be a Chinese tot, Or a white and a shaven crown, Or a dear little girl of the Land of the Free,
Or a tottling Prince in London town, Or the one rare treasure a Soudan slave, Back in his mother's gentle pride Is fairer than all the world beside.

Whose mother is loved the best?
Baby's own.
She whose cheek was first caressed—She alone.
For whether she be an Eskimo,
Or colored mammy, or stately queen,
Or a wandering organ-grinder's wife, Jingling and bustling her tambourine, In every land where children are,
The baby eyes from their deep, serene Gaze, nature-born by the tender gaze In the mother's beamed, love-lit face.
—Woman's Home Companion.

At the Eleventh Hour.

Barbara was old, papa," protested Barbara.
"A man should be several years the senior of his wife," declared Quintus Bessinger.
"And he has a glass eye!"
"One less with which to observe short-comings, my dear,"
"And his false teeth."
"So have I. Now, Barbara, be reasonable, and think it over." Barbara thought it over, and decided that if being sensible meant marrying Quintus Bessinger, she must persist in her foolishness. The next time her father returned to the charge he put his plan on personal grounds. His pathetic representation of his position was rather effective. The improvements in his place building had cost much more than he had fancied they would. An Eastern firm, on whose leniency he had relied, were pressing him for immediate payment of a heavy account. Ferguson had practically refused him further advances because Barbara had declined to marry him. "He could not better use his money than in looking to the man who he was anxious to accept as a father-in-law."
"I wouldn't urge you," concluded Bessinger, "if I thought you cared for any one else."
"No, Barbara?"
"Barbara was eighteen. She had a round, trim young form, a brunette face full of life and sparkle, arch ha-sels, and a lovely complexion. There was no one else, papa!" There was no doubting the girl's sincerity of the reply. "Give me two weeks more to consider. Then—I'll say yes, if I can."
"You take your poor, old father thing!"
Bessinger made the most of Barbara's concession. Ferguson was profoundly gratified. This one movable eye expressed his happy anticipation.
"Well, he," said he, "I have never believed because my ideal was so lofty.
Never until I met Miss Barbara did I meet any woman possessing every perfection."
"Tell her yourself," advised Quintus.
"Girls don't like to be courted through their parents."
So Ferguson called every evening.
His deliberate compliments and late glimpses of her wild with resentment. Two weeks! Why hadn't he said two months? Surely the hours were racing by. It seemed as though he had fairly galloped out of sight. His father grew more haggard—more depressed. She used to catch him watching her furtively. Ferguson would stare off full, would hold up his business, would put his credit on a firm basis, if only—He had been a good father to her. She would probably never fall in love anyway. For happily she ought to do as he wished—there she stood.
The fatal day of her decision arrived. A glorious day it was, crisp and golden, with a rolicking wind skurrying along State street and playing pranks at the corner where towers the Masonic temple. Just there it swirled a girl's skirts around her slender ankles, and not content with this naughty—naughty off her veil and flung it out of reach. But a tall man in a gray suit gave pursuit. "Oh, thank you," cried Barbara, blushing, when he stood before her, but in hand, returning the transit trifles, "you are very kind." A murmured deprecation, a longer-ing, eloquent look of admiration, a deep bow, and he was lost in the crowd.
Barbara's heart was warm with excitement. Some little while after the gate offered her roses. She took them and kissed the children. She had never thought flowers and child faces so beautiful before. She had never smiling as she ran upstairs. She was startled by the liveliness of her own re-fection in the glass. Why did she feel so happy? Why suddenly she seemed to see again the brightness of her living eyes? No! She surely was not so silly as that! In delicious, girlish shame she pressed her hand fingers over her eyes to shut out those others. But they would not be shut. They peered into her still. All at once a dreadful thought thrilled her.

TO-NIGHT GILES FERGUSON WOULD COME.

sharp sense of reputation overwhelmed her. She could not marry him! She would not. She bathed, colored her dark hair afresh, went down to her room.

WHITE AS A LILY, BARBARA CAME FORWARD.

to dinner in a gown of easy lawn. At 8 o'clock the hopeful sister made his appearance. He wore a brand-new suit, and was apparently prepared for conquest. He and Bessinger talked.
At 10 Barbara was to give her final decision. She watched the clock in an agony of nervousness. Half-past 10.
The hands were moving around the dial with appalling speed. "Niece—She does not know the bell had rung—that a visitor was shown in. He was young, tall, good-looking. With a star she recognized the agile carrier of her veil.
"The angel gentleman is Mr. Ferguson," she heard the servant say.
The stranger walked straight up to Barbara's sister.
"How do you do, father?" he said.
"What's that, my dear?" the old man. He had turned ghastly.
"My name is Robin Ferguson. I only arrived yesterday from California.
Your man told me I would find you here. My mother died three months ago. Dying, she told me the story of your devotion to me when I was a child.
She said she made me promise to look you up. For her sake I've done it. I can prove all I say."
"I—I can't discuss the matter with you here—now." His teeth chattered.
He was forced they would drop out.
"Even if it were so—I'd not give you a cent!"
The new-comer burst out laughing.
"I'll never ask you for one. My mother brother left all his property to me, and there's a rattling lot of it, too."
"Oh," gasped Ferguson, senior.
This gave matters a new aspect. But—Barbara. The clock struck 10.
"Barbara," said Bessinger, rising, "you agreed to tell Giles Ferguson at this hour whether or not you would marry him."
"While a Lily Barbara came forward. The young fellow stared in delightened surprise, as turning, he faced her.
"Never! You would not wish me now, papa, to do so. At any rate, I could never love him." Then she bowed slightly and took herself and her peach-blossom gown from the room.
But now Barbara learned how easy it was to outstride one's whole heart when the one destined lover came. Out of confidential talks grew reconciliation between father and son.
"Lord, what an old fool I was!" he said. "Things are only as they ought to be! Bessinger and I are going into partnership. Together we'll make the business pay. And you, my dear, you have any objection if I were to take the bride?"
"No, indeed!" cried the groom, heartily.
"No, indeed!" echoed the bride sweetly as she held up her glowing cheek.

OLIVERS HAVE RISKY WORK.

Life is fraught with dangers of every kind.
The job of the oiler is by no means enviable, says the Chicago Chronicle.
In big establishments there are such vast numbers of wheels, shafts, platens and other moving points of contact which need frequent lubrication that one man is constantly employed pouring oil into the places needed. In some of the extremely large manufacturing plants there are acres of machinery the services of more than one man are required to perform this task. The job is more or less disagreeable and dangerous. One false step or careless movement and the man may come in contact with a piece of swiftly revolving machinery that will hurt him to death in a second. Every minute of his time is spent in a wilderness of powerful forces replete with death-dealing vigor. As is often the case, these men are required to work in a carelessness, and many others while engaged in work have been caught in a cog wheel or fallen upon a shaft and been instantaneously killed, fatally injured or maimed for life.

THE OTHER BECOMES SO EXPERT IN HIS WORK THAT BY TOUCHING A POINT OF CONTACT HE CAN TELL FROM THE DEGREE OF HEAT WHETHER OR NOT THE PLACE NEEDS OILING.

Some of the unusual heat is caused by the presence of some foreign substance or a bit of worn-out metal in the place. It is normal temperature. If a place is not too badly heated the oiler can tell from the temperature by touch whether or not the place needs oiling.
The oiler becomes so expert in his work that by touching a point of contact he can tell from the degree of heat whether or not the place needs oiling.
In some instances a point he comes so hot that it is necessary to stop the machinery and let the heated spot cool down before he can touch it. The Stood Death Off.

E. B. Munday, a lawyer of Henrietta, Tex., once fooled a grave-digger. He says: "My brother was very low with malarial fever and jaundice. I persuaded him to try Electric Bitters, and he was soon much better, but continued their use until entirely cured. I am sure Electric Bitters saved his life." This remedy expels malaria, kills disease germs and purifies the blood; aids digestion, regulates liver, kidneys, and bowels, cures constipation, dyspepsia, nervous diseases, kidney troubles, and female complaints; gives perfect health. Only 50 cts., at Crowell's.

EDISON'S PHONOGRAPH

Better than a Piano, Organ, or Music Box, for it sings and talks as well as plays, and don't cost as much. It reproduces the music of any instrument—band or orchestra—tells stories and sings—the old familiar hymns as well as the popular songs—it is always ready. See that Mr. Edison's signature is on every machine. Catalogues of all dealers, or NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH CO., 135 Fifth Ave., New York.
