Volunteer Fire Company.

The Company held their annual business meeting last Monday even'g. Dr. J. C. Bitler was chosen President pro tem.

Among other items of business was the proposed lowering of the first floor to do away with the "drop" at the entrance. Kirk Spear's bid was the only one received, and proposed a cinder bottom, covered with grouting and cement, to cost $105. Trustees were authorized to give him the job, work to begin at once if possible. As these figures do not include tearing out the floor, volunteers will be called for to do that work the evening before the contractor begins.

Through the kindness of Mr. Stockwell, the fire apparatus will be stored in his driveway during operations, which will continue about ten days.

The reports showed an enrollment of twenty-eight members, and sufficient money on hand to pay all previously contracted bills.

The following officers were declared elected, without the aid of a primary election :

President, J. C. Bitler, M. D.
Vice-Pres't, H. Kirk Spear.
Rec. & Fin. Sec'y, H. C. Leonard.
Treasurer, Wm. H. Bernshouse.
Trustees, Wm. O. Hoyt, A. L. Jackson, J. C. Bitler.

Foreman, G. F. Lenz.
Ass't Foreman, W. P. Bakely.
Representative to Relief Ass'n, Dr. J. C. Bitler.

A joint meeting of the two companies was called, to nominate a Chief and Assistant; but a new law has complicated the matter, and action was deferred. A special meeting will be called.

The Relief Association was then called to order by President Garton. After hearing reports of delegates and officers, and paying bills, the following officers were elected :

President, Joseph H. Garton
Vice-Pres't, Wm. O. Hoyt
Secretary, H. C. Leonard
Collector and Treasurer, Wm. H. Bernshouse.

Board of Visitors, P. H. Jacobs, A. L. Jackson, A. E. Holman, H. M. Phillips, John Pruschi.

Messrs. Garton and Walther were elected life members of the Association have served five years as delegates.

This space belongs to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and its members are responsible for what they publish.

From reports, it would seem that the Town Council of Hammon-ton misunderstood the meaning of the petition sent in by the W. C. T. U. It was not a question of equal rights of auto or bicycle repairers, machine shops, or any other places of business, as compared with the opening of the churches for the preaching of the gospel. That question would need no discussion. The subject before them was,—Is there any law in the State of New Jersey compelling the closing up of these places of business on the Sabbath-day? If so, would they kindly enforce that law in the Town of Hammon-ton?

The ladies of the Union held an evangelistic service in their Chapel on Tuesday afternoon. Much spiritual fervor and zeal was manifested through the session, each member feeling the importance of her noble mission, in helping her fellow man and striving for the advancement of the Master's Kingdom.

A SONG.

A song rolled out of a heart one day,
And it drifted over a distant bay.
It carried a message of hope and cheer,
And its charm was breathed in a listening ear.
For it soothed the brows that were lined with care,
And it stilled the white in the midnight hair;
It whispered the calm of a heart at rest;
And it stayed the ache in the troubled breast.
A psalm to duty, all hopeless fears,
A song that will live for a thousand years.

—Waverley Magazine.

A CALL IN BUSINESS HOURS

THE young man at the desk was busy, very busy. He was all ways busy. He made a specialty of hard work. No doubt he carried the load too far. His complexion had lost its ruddy glow, his muscles were relaxing. But he worked on.

The fact is, he was determined to succeed. He wanted fame and he wanted money. He wanted fame for himself, and he wanted money because it meant power. It meant something else to him—at least he hoped it did—something so far away that it made him gasp to think that he could ever stretch out his arms for it.

John Hammond often said to him—John Hammond was his partner and very good friend—

"Jim Warwick, you're putting too much fuel into your firebox. You'll have nothing left back when you need a little reserve force. Slack up, my boy, and take things easier. We are doing well enough. This is a rising time. We are going to climb all right and there's no use taking any short-cut to the summit. Put on the brakes, my lad."

So spoke John Hammond, three-and-thirty, to his partner, nine-and-twenty. It was the voice of experience and the voice of wisdom, but Jim Warwick wasn't ready to heed it.

Once in a while John Hammond drew him into society, pleasant little card parties, a theater party once, and once a dance. John Hammond's wife liked Jim—everybody liked him, for that matter—there hadn't been a more popular man at college, and she was a very charming girl, who would lure him away from that littered desk for a reasonable portion of the time.

There was a girl, but Anna Hammond, for all her cleverness, never dreamed of her identity. And Jim Warwick scarcely dared to dream it either.

Jim was alone in the office this January afternoon. Hammond's wife had called for him and he had gone away with her. She had put her bright face for a moment in the doorway.

"All work and no play makes Jim a dull boy," she cried once, and you are going with us to the theater next week. Good-by."

And Jim, looking after her, felt that Hammond was a very lucky man. Recently he pushed the papers back, lifted his head with a little sigh, even leaned back and pushed his head against his chair back. He felt a sudden impulse to grab his hat and away. Was the game worth the play?

He put his teeth together with a click and seized his pencil again. Lady wants to see you, sir," was the voice of the office boy doorway.

"Mr. Hammond is out," for you, sir," he frowned.

"Where is Arthur?" the young man asked.

"In the Hawaiian Islands with a tiny man. It seems to be the only climate that will keep him alive. He is on one of the smaller islands, high up above the sea level. He can never leave there."

Warwick nodded in profound sympathy.

"May I write to him?" he asked.

"Wait! He said, 'until I have quite finished.' She drew a long breath. 'Let me leave this subject for a moment!'"

"Why of course we will," he burst out. "I beg your pardon. You surprised me so. He laughed suddenly. 'I beg your pardon again,' he said, but can you assure me that I am quite aware of it?"

She gently smiled.

"I can," she said. "And now I must ask you to forgive me for bringing the sordid element into what was intended to be purely a sentimental call. I have tried to show you that I have confidence in your integrity and your ability. I have done it to show that I am truly grateful for your kindness to my sister."

"Whatever your motive," murmured Warwick, "I accept the trust and thank you."

"The transfer of the papers will be made at any time you prefer," said the girl. "The business may necessitate several calls at my home. Will you attend to this, or would you prefer to have Mr. Hammond take it in charge?"

"I will come," he quickly said.

"I am sure," she said, "that you will be a great help to me."

"I am sure," she said, "that you will be a great help to me."

"I am sure," she said, "that you will be a great help to me."

see how he could help him. You did you try to make him like you, sir? I know what it is. It's your money that frightens him. Jim would rather die than have it. It's the only thing he has. He's a fortune hunter. Honest old Jim! You know what I've done? I've gone down on the beach and turned my face to the east and I've tried to influence him across the trembling waves, and make him fond of you—and it there's anything in telepathy, I've succeeded. Of course, this is a sick man's fancy. It's that and nothing more. I can't bear to think of leaving you all alone. If you had Jim it would be all right. I tell you, sir, if you had any nerve you'd take this letter down to him and read it aloud. It would not be your voice, you know. It would be a voice from afar—it would be the pleading cry of a passing soul."

She stopped suddenly with a low sob, and the letter slipped from her fingers.

Warwick's eyes were on the papers that stared his desk, but he suddenly looked up. Then he softly rose and closed the door tightly and slowly came back. And the girl, with her hands before her face, sobbed above the letter.

"Miss Ormsby," said Warwick, "I cannot begin to tell you how I appreciate the beautiful devotion that has prompted this act. Let us believe that you were influenced by the prayer that has gone out to you from that far body pacing the lonely beach. It may be this influence that emboldens me to say what I might never have dreamed of saying. For Arthur is right, Miss Ormsby. It is your wealth that has kept me from you. It is for you that I have toiled here, and hoped and struggled. From the first time I saw you I knew you were the one woman in the world. I am glad to tell you this, Miss Ormsby. May I—may I write it to Arthur?"

He waited until she slowly raised her tear-stained face.

"I shall say for your confession," she softly said, "and I shall say to be an honorable man. Otherwise I could not have come." She paused, and her voice trembled when she resumed.

FEEDER FOR STOCK

One of the disagreeable tasks in relation to the care of horses, cows or other cattle is the necessity of arising early and supplying them with feed. This is especially true with milk dealers, bakers and many others who are compelled to get up on horse or cow before setting their route in order to feed their horses. This is also the case on Sundays with all drivers of teams. Automatic time stock feeders are not new to the trade, by any means, but few are as simple as the one shown in the illustration. This is a contrivance that the feed may be automatically released at a predetermined moment by attachment to an alarm clock and fed into a trough or manger.

A chute, through which the feed is to be passed, is shown here, with a hinged door at right angles to the inner wall thereof, the door being connected with a light Oriental shawl, whose gold threads glimmered softly in the September sunshine.

"Ah! but you must have mistaken," said he. "It isn't possible, you know, the village girls can afford you."

"But they do," said Belle, with an imperative nod of the fair, sunshiny head. "Why is it, Capt. Cardan? Am I ugly, or cross, or unloved?"

"No," declared the captain, with the air of a schoolmaster, "but you are a little bit of a puzzle."

"Then why is it?" said Belle, piously. "Do try to find out for me, Capt. Cardan, and I shall be—oh, so obliged to you!" And now it was the turn of the girl to be puzzled, going to walk down to the postoffice.

"May I walk with you?" asked the captain, piously.

"If you wouldn't mind, I'd rather go alone," said Belle, with so proprietary a smile that the captain felt no sting of wounded vanity.

But Miss Brabazon, flitting lightly along as if the tread of the soft grass was delightful to her feet, had not needed so far as the village girls, who were used to a stone fence when an uncomfortable sound, like the low, muttered threat of a distant earthquake, fell on her ears.

"It's the big red bull!" she said to herself. "I might have known he was there. Of course I can't cross the field now and I shall have to go round by the road, after all. Oh, dear, oh, dear!"

But just at that moment a tall figure swung itself over the fence—Seth Vallance's.

"Are you afraid of Nero, Miss Brabazon?" he said. "But there is no beast; he is chained."

Belle shrank back, with varying color.

"The woman I love with my heart," he said.

"In a cozy corner, sir! A soft pillow, soft and willowy. Smoother of lips that are big and blowy. Sympathetic, noncommittal. Dreamlike love of a girl."

Our Next Congressman.

Every indication points to the re-nomination, to-day, of Hon. John J. Gardner for his seventh consecutive term as Representative in Congress from this Second District. We have watched and listened for some echo of a protest or contest, but have so far found none.

This is as it should be. A trustworthy and able representative will gain in knowledge and influence in our National Legislature every year, hence becomes more useful and valuable to his constituents and nation at large, and should be continued in office for our benefit.

Such a man is Mr. Gardner, and his prospective re-nomination gives us unalloyed satisfaction.

Hon. Edward C. Stokes, our candidate for Governor, is well known all over New Jersey. He has been in public life for many years, and is at present Clerk of the Court of Chancery. Not a word of disparagement has reached us in all his career. Of his ability there is no doubt; of his Republicanism he has given us ample proof. He will be elected in November, and prove a good Governor.

We forget who it was that said a bank would not pay in Hammonston. We hope he can read the last paragraph of the People's Bank's thirty-fifth semi-annual report, published this week. It states that a semi-annual dividend of six per cent has been declared, and five thousand dollars added to the surplus fund. What other business in town has done as well?

customers, in our estimation. When they are sent to us on a trifling errand we always remember that they are not discriminating buyers, and take special pains to see that they get what both you and they want. Then we always try to be prompt in waiting on them—there is always a little worry about them at home when they are sent out upon an errand and stay so long, often through no fault of their own.

PROSPERITY STILL REIGNS

Democratic Efforts to Breed Distrust Have So Far Proved Futile.

REBUKE FOR THE CALAMITY HOWLERS

Railway Traffic Is Heavy, New Factories Are Being Erected, and Iron and Steel Mills Are Crowded with Orders.

There is an effort on the part of some Democratic newspapers and a few blatant orators to create a lack of confidence in the public mind by saying the country is going to the bad; that great industries are shutting down; that the railroads are retrenching, instead of improving roadbed and equipment; that no new factories are being constructed; that thousands of working people are idle and that Republican prosperity is a myth. Those statements are so palpably false, or so greatly exaggerated, that intelligent persons are not misled by them, but there is danger that when the calamity howlers a few people who do not keep closely in touch with industrial and commercial conditions may be led to believe them.

Any man or newspaper that deliberately attempts to create distrust in the financial or commercial world is little less than criminal. Some States have punitive laws framed for the purpose of sending to prison persons who circulate unfounded rumors about banks and trust companies. If the man who causes a run on a bank by spreading a false report is a criminal, is not the man or newspaper that attempts to make political capital by destroying public confidence also a criminal? And, by the same reasoning, is not the party that permits or induces the utterances of the calamity howler and spreader of false rumors an enemy of the law?

What Is Possible.
Suppose the Democratic party won a victory at the polls through destroying confidence in commercial and industrial circles, would the administration of that party have the confidence of the people? Would not capital, which is always timid in the face of uncertainty, begin to hide? And when capital is distrustful what happens? Industries lag or close, trade of the retail merchant falls off, the jobber and wholesaler suffer, railway traffic diminishes, hundreds of thousands of wage earners are thrown out of work, and the country generally sinks into a depression from which it is difficult to revive.

Second Term Question.
No political party that countenances the creation of distrust is worthy of the people's confidence. It will be a sorry day for the country when the calamity howlers succeed in reversing those beneficial policies which the Republican party has put into effect and which have resulted in an era of the greatest prosperity any nation has ever known.

That industries and business of all kinds continue to prosper there can be no doubt. The few strikes in the building and other trades are not indicative of depressed conditions. Wage earners do not strike in times of panic or want of work. Strikes are generally for higher wages, and no toiler expects an increase in wages when work is scarce and thousands of his fellows are idle.

There is ample evidence that prosperous times are still with us. A glance at the newspapers, Democratic as well as Republican, shows that millions of dollars are being expended in building new factories and enlarging old ones, in constructing new trolley lines and improving the roadbed and equipment of steam railroads.

More persons are employed now than ever before. As proof of this statement, take, for instance, the railways, whose traffic always is a reflex of business conditions generally. The number of employees on the pay rolls of the railways in the United States on June 30, 1903, was 1,312,637, or 630 per 100 miles of line. These figures, compared with those of 1902, show an increase of 123,222, or 65 per 100 miles of line.

A summary of dispatches taken from the Boston Evening Transcript, the Pittsburgh Dispatch and other reputable newspapers in the last five days is here given:

Jackson, Minn. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars will be spent by the Great Northern Railroad in building a line from Minneapolis to the Canadian border.

SOME COMPARISONS

CONDITION OF TREASURY UNDER PREVIOUS ADMINISTRATIONS.

How the Public Debt Was Managed When Democracy Was in Power and How the National Finances Were Conserved Later by Republicans.

When Grover Cleveland began his first fiscal year, July 1, 1893, of his second term, our public debt was $1,345,000,000; when the fourth fiscal year closed, June 30, 1897, it was $1,817,000,000, an increase of $472,000,000, without anything to show for it.

When Benjamin Harrison began his first fiscal year, July 1, 1889, our public debt was $1,019,000,000; when his fourth fiscal year ended, June 30, 1893, it was $1,545,000,000, a decrease of $526,000,000.

When we add Cleveland's increase of $472,000,000 in the public debt to Harrison's decrease of $526,000,000, we have a bill of indictment amounting to $58,000,000 against the Democratic party as a result of "four years more of Grover."

WHEN HILL WILL QUIT.

[David Bennett Hill says he will abandon politics when Parker is elected.]

"When Parker is elected," Mr. David Bennett Hill announces that he will suddenly grow still. He says that for rude politics he really shall not care.

When Parker has been planted in the Presidential chair—O, gentle reader, with alarm do not grow cold and stiff; there's much of virtue in that "When" as Shakespeare said of "It."

"When Parker is elected"—it's a striking trait of David's. That always in his statements there's a little phrase that saves. You see, it would have sounded like an unexpected joke.

Had he said he'd retire the day that David said, "I'm broke." "When Parker is elected, I shall put campaigning by."

Was how he emphasized it, and he winked the other eye.

When Parker is elected, then the stars will shine at noon. And we will shovel snow along about the month of June.

The birds will put on trousers and the crocodiles will sing. The frogs will be electing Mr. Stork to be their king.

And when these things have happened, if you think to notice it—"When Parker is elected," David Bennett Hill will quit.

"When Parker is elected"—why, he might as well have said—That he'd be chasing ballots when the rest of us are dead.

And that we'd hear him talking when the Last Day's trumpet called. Or that he'd drop his schemes when he ceased from being balld.

When Parker is elected—he will quit, and also then. We'll learn that David Bennett Hill is growing hair again.

MR. HILL'S RETIREMENT.
It is fortunate for him, but its manner is not the best.

David Bennett Hill announces that he will at the end of his sixty-first year retire from politics, but that he will take a part in the present campaign. The mistake that Mr. Hill makes is that he does not retire now. This is one of the things he said in his recent opening campaign speech at Binghamton, New York:

That vast corruption exists in many departments of the Federal Government is virtually conceded. It has been declared often that more corruption has been disclosed during the last four years than during the whole previous period of our history. Therefore it must exist, or it could not be disclosed. Convictions for frauds, however, can be counted on one's fingers. The Republican party tends toward socialism when it advocates the right to build up one man's business at the expense of the community. What the American people demand is a free field and a fair contest in the race of life.

It is perhaps fortunate for Mr. Hill that he has decided to disappear from politics. It is most unfortunate, for his sake, that in his speech, practically opening the campaign on the Democratic side, he should have been guilty of political falsehood. That is not the manner in which a good American should sing his swan song.

All men should be fair. Mr. Hill declares that enormous corruption exists under the present Republican administration, and intimates vaguely that the Republican party is responsible for any evil which may have occurred. He refers especially to frauds of the Postoffice Department, and there were some frauds. We at least admit this. Into every great party will necessarily be ingrafted some thieves. What has happened in the United States following the discovery that some officials of the Postoffice Department were indirectly stealing?

What has happened is this: The Republican party punishes its own thieves and throws them out of its ranks. What happened to the men who stole under the present administration? They are already wearing striped clothes and doing the lockstep in various penitentiaries.

YOUNG DEMOCRATS
These Who Voted for McKinley Probably Will Support Roosevelt.

(Kansas City Star, Independent.)
Some allowance must be made, of course, for the optimistic representations of politicians at the approach of every great election. It is a part of the game to manifest confidence, even if the policy of "claiming everything" has been discredited by the best political managers.

But the declaration that, according to more or less careful canvasses, these young Democrats who bolted Bryan and voted for McKinley will remain in the Republican party, is quite plausible. These old Democrats in whom the party spirit is still strong in spite of the trying alignment of the Democracy four and eight years ago, may be expected to return to the fold pretty generally this year; but there is nothing except partisan feeling to draw them, and this does not exist to any great extent among the younger generation, especially among those who have already broken over the line to vote for a Republican President.

Indeed, President Roosevelt appeals with especial force to the young men of the nation. Considering his achievement, he is still a young man himself. He is in intimate sympathy with the spirit of early manhood. He is vigorous in mind and body, and is active in both. He is strongly progressive. His leadership has been inspiring to all classes, but more especially to those in whom ambition is active. The policies appear before him to those who would make a stronger and a better nation. He stands for these reforms that are regarded as essential to the perpetuity of personal liberty and civic righteousness.

The belief that President Roosevelt, in his splendid fulfillment of an obligation assumed as a result of accident, has carried an election on the hands of the people he has served, is especially strong in the hearts of the younger generation of voters.

The Democratic argument this year should be pitched in the humorous column. It is in brief: "You need not be afraid of us, for if we elect a President and the House, the Republican Senate will keep us from doing any damage."

"Growth is the law of our national, social and industrial being. We have not yet reached the limit of the Divine purpose. Tomorrow will be greater and more splendid than today." Senator Patheon, Oct. 10, 1903.
