How to Use Peas.

PROF. W. F. MANN.

With the approach of wheat seeding there is a renewed interest in the proper method of utilizing the growth of the cow pea, which many are trying for the first time. A North Carolina correspondent writes that by following my advice and using 250 lbs. acid phosphate and 50 lbs. muriate of potash on his peas, he has the finest growth ever seen in that section. "On a poor old hill, thrown out and no longer cultivated, I put hands at work, grubbed it and turned with a large plow, and drilled the peas. They are waist high, and much of the growth has fallen and gotten badly matted. It is a question how I am to get them successfully turned, as I want to turn under the crop and sow wheat this Fall. I want this wheat to be an object lesson to our farmers, as the peas have already been.
What do you suggest?" Another letter is from a New Jersey correspondent, at Hammonton, who sends an article in a South Jersey paper which he wrote on his success with the cow pea. After a year or so of experience with other sorts, he this year sowed the Wonderful, and he says the growth is perfectly wonderful.
He too wants to turn them under to get the land ready to plant berries in the Spring. But the growth bothers him.
He thinks they should be plowed under before the frost kills the leaves, for fear they may blow away. Now to the North Carolina man we would say, we are decidedly of the opinion that the object lesson will not be what you want it to be if you plow under the whole growth of peas for wheat. The mass will prevent your getting the land in the firm condition that wheat loves, and we are sure that if you plow them under green you will run serious risk of souring the land.
Better mow them, cure for hay, feed the hay, and return the manure. A little phosphate and potash on the wheat would do no harm. But as the land was plowed late for the peas, we would not re-plow at this late date for wheat, but merely get the surface fine with a cut-away and drill the wheat in. To our Jersey friend we would say that the best thing he can do if he devotes the whole crop to the direct improvement of the land, is to let the wonderful growth remain right where it is till he gets ready to prepare the land for the berries. The land in the southern part of New Jersey does not freeze up and stay frozen all winter, we believe. In fact, I expect they have more rain than hard freezing.

If this is the case, land plowed in the fall and let lie bare will loach fertility fast, particularly as it is sandy land. Let the peas remain as a soil cover, and plow them under when partly decayed, and you will have no difficulty whatever in getting the land in order, as they will then rot very fast. We are very sure this will be the best for the berries and the land, too. But to the farmer who has cattle to feed, a growth of peas such as these friends describe is well worth $20 per acre, and perhaps more, for feed.
If carefully fed, and the manure carefully saved, fully one-half, if not more, of the manurial value can be recovered in the droppings. The plowing under will doubtless help the land more than the cutting off, and it is for each one to consider whether he can afford to manure his land at this rate, when the manure would probably show as good results when used as the plowing under. In the case of our North Carolina friend, his old land needs humus so badly that it may pay him to use the peas as manure. But if he does, we would not put the land in wheat, but let the peas lie as advised in the other case, and plow under in the spring, for a hoed crop.—Practical Farmer.

sumption, coughs and colds. I cannot

All arrangements for burials made

His fruit farms in '85 were nothing to what they have been since. About that time Hamamonton soldiers returned, and many new families came in. The principal theme of conversation was fruits. Some had cultivated small patches, which had netted big prices, and this stimulated the ambition of the Yankee element, and soon strawberries began pouring in from every direction, in all kinds of vehicles, in crates and boxes of all sorts and sizes. The only outlet was by cars on a siding near the station. Teams stood in line awaiting their turn to be registered by busy clerks and unloaded by busy hands. I remember one evening hearing Capt. Sonnerby say he had loaded that afternoon 70,000 quarts. I also remember, one Monday morning, being at the station as quite a number of teams came in, loaded with berries for the up-train. They piled the chests on each side of the track, and stationed men ready to hustle them in when the cars came. They gave the conductor a chest of berries to hold the train two or three minutes.
