The American Woman of Today and Tomorrow

AN ENTIRELY new type of woman will emerge from the chaos of the world war. All evolution is only a question of tempo, but the world-wide war has been long for the new type had not the war come to hasten the process and accomplish overnight changes for which, under ordinary conditions, years and decades would have been required.

Many people who think for themselves, instead of using the conventional ideas of the past, regard this war as the triumph of the free forces of the world, and this despite the fact that the war has been a source of suffering and destruction in claiming the special patronage and protection of the great God of Battles.

But if any good has come out of this chaos of evil and righteous destruction, it is the awakening of the women of the world to a full sense of their national destiny. The war has been a rude awakening, and for nearly three years have been standing in the home trenches, organizing, educating, and working to win, and to endure until the end.

It is up to the women of the world that the burden of the war is to fall, and ultimately, let us not deceive ourselves upon this point. Never before in any war, have women gone forth to battle as they have now in the countries where war has become a grim activity, they have been turned into creatures of steel, they have been brought to meet war emergency, they have neither whimpered nor bemoaned their fate, and the word "lacker" is unknown in their vocabulary.

Women are no longer allowed to be the scant consolation of being the mothers of heroes, angels of mercy and the more traditional women of the past. They are bigger and more strenuous tasks to perform; they must fill the gaps in the home army of labor-saving devices for the men who are away from home now and reap, and keep the wheels of industry moving; they must fill the gaps for the men who are away from home now and reap, and keep the wheels of industry moving; they must fill the gaps for the men who are away from home now and reap, and keep the wheels of industry moving.

Illustration of a woman in a uniform, possibly a nurse or soldier, standing next to a machine.

her will fall. In large measure, the task of women is to win the war, and to endure until the end.

Par more, appalling than the destruction of material values, which years of peace and prosperity have built up, is the loss of the human life. There will be no more vital problem to be solved by the women of the world in the decade or decades succeeding this war. As a broad winner and citizeness with her more imperative duties of motherhood, she will be called upon to show her national caliber, even though in the future, reconstruction.

AMERICA has now been drawn into the war, and American women will be called upon to show their national caliber, even though in the future, reconstruction.

As a matter of fact, the women of America have been called upon to show their national caliber, even though in the future, reconstruction.

As a matter of fact, the women of America have been called upon to show their national caliber, even though in the future, reconstruction.

WOMEN have been included in the municipal council of Berlin and other large cities in Germany, and no civic measure bearing upon the subjects of public health and all other matters of the municipality is carried out without first consulting the council and the opinion of the women. This is a new type of woman, one who is not only a citizen, but a leader.

The woman's question is neither one of daily bread nor of political rights, but a question of the national caliber of the woman, and of the position of the woman in the world. The woman of today is a woman of action, a woman of leadership, a woman of responsibility.

The woman of today is a woman of action, a woman of leadership, a woman of responsibility. She is a woman who is not only a citizen, but a leader. She is a woman who is not only a citizen, but a leader. She is a woman who is not only a citizen, but a leader.

THE STUFF SHE WAS MADE OF

LIM, fair and in immaculate uniform, Henrietta Osgood, stood by the desk of the superintendent of nurses. "You wanted me, Miss Randall?" she asked. "Yes, Miss Randall," she said. "I wish to tell you that you are to assist in the operating room tomorrow morning. You will be in charge of the patient, and you will be responsible for her care. You will be in charge of the patient, and you will be responsible for her care. You will be in charge of the patient, and you will be responsible for her care."

of knowing a routine thoroughly, when, by one cut word of criticism, the surgeon could make her forget it. "What was the use of her thinking that, merely by hard work, she could conquer her terror of the operating room? Success meant having a steady right at that howlingly third case. As a frail, white-faced woman was brought into the operating room, Henrietta caught a glimpse of the surgeon's face. "That's a good one," he said. "That's a good one," he said. "That's a good one," he said.

So, the day came when Henrietta, with Miss Randall, a new assistant nurse, took full charge of the operating room. "This morning for your first," said Miss Randall. "Only two minor cases, both for Dr. Minn, who is very considerate. I shall be here for you whole night on your work." Dr. Minn was pleasant and wanted nothing out of the ordinary. Miss Randall, who was busy directing the new nurse, paid very little attention to Henrietta. Everyone treated Henrietta as if she were merely part of the hospital machinery. That helped her. She was not a person, but a part of the machinery. She was not a person, but a part of the machinery. She was not a person, but a part of the machinery.

Henrietta paled at the thought of the possible calamity. She dared not speak to the surgeon. In a low tone she addressed his assistant: "That last sponge—It is light red blood." Before the assistant could respond, Dr. Joelin looked up sharply. "What's that?" The assistant explained, and pointed to the sponge. The surgeon gave it one look. "A sponge," he said. "A sponge," he said. "A sponge," he said.

Our Hudsons are About All Gone

Number of Super-Sixes at present prices limited. Practically all makers have already increased prices

We now see the last of the Hudson Super-Six cars we will be able to sell at present prices. The factory has given us definite allotments. On at least two models they have notified us that final shipments will be completed within two weeks.

When those cars are sold it means that the last Hudson Super-Six to be had at the present base price of $1,650 for the seven-passenger phaeton has gone. Then a new price will become effective. That price will be based upon material costs that are much higher than were those of the present production.

As a single example of the greater cost of an automobile to-day, as compared to the cost of a year ago, consider the item of iron. Its low price for the years 1915-17 was $12.27 a ton. To-day it sells at $52.90 a ton. Iron is used in making the finest steels, the frame, the motor, the body, etc. Its use in a fine automobile constitutes a large item. You can get from this some idea of the tremendous need for automobile price increases.

Then, when you think of the number of cars that have gone up in price in the last few months, you get a further understanding of the great opportunity you have in buying a Hudson Super-Six now. More than fifty makers have advanced prices within the past two months. Cars which formerly sold at $1,200 and $1,300 now cost about as much as a Super-Six. There was no question as to which was the preferred car then, though because of the lower price many such cars were sold. Now that there is no price advantage, Hudson sales are at their highest. People realize more than ever before that a Hudson offers the greatest value on the market. They are taking advantage of the opportunity that the present market condition offers. You, too, can save as they are saving if you act promptly. We know how many cars we are to get, but we don't know how much longer we can accept orders at present prices.

Be guided by the experience of the past as it affects the Super-Six. Buy now. It is like buying any other staple on which you have positive knowledge that there is soon to be a price increase. Surely there need be nothing said in this connection to persuade you to a Super-Six. It has already established its reputation on every speedway, in every endurance test, in the most difficult mountain climbs, in the most arduous road trips, and most of all in the minds of more than forty thousand users.
