AND Demorest's Monthly Magazine.
A WONDERFUL PUBLICATION.

Many suppose DEMOREST'S MONTHLY to be a fiction magazine. This is a great mistake. It undoubtedly contains the finest fiction department of any magazine published, but this is the case from the fact that great enterprise and experience are shown, so that each department is equal to a magazine in itself. In Demorest's you get in each issue a new, and secure amusement and instruction for the whole family. It contains stories, poems, and the most attractive illustrations, including Artistic, Scientific, and Historical matters, and is illustrated with original Steel Engravings, Photographs, Water-Colours, and fine Woodcuts, making it the most beautiful and valuable of all magazines.

Each copy contains a PATTERN. Every cutting the holder to the selection of ANY PATTERN illustrated in any number of the Magazine, and in any of the money paid. Single copies (each containing Pattern Order), 20 cents.

Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, New York.

The above combination is a splendid chance to get our paper and Demorest's Monthly at reduced rate. Send your subscriptions to this office.

HORSE NOTES.

—Palmer had three mounts at Merchantsville recently and won them all. —Gabe Caldwell, the starter at Brighton Beach, is able to be about September 19th, was buried at Holmdel, N. Y.

—Every race at the Brooklyn track on Thursday September 10th was won by a colored jockey.

—W. L. Scott's stable, including Chance, Torrey, Banquet, Leighton, etc., will go into winter quarters.

—The chute at Louisville will not be used hereafter. The main track has been widened to 160 feet on the backstretch.

—Ella Doe will be retired after the Washington meeting in October and will be sent to Mr. Jennings' stock farm in Virginia to be bred.

—Gregory, formerly the Abundance colt, was sold by Mr. Withers for a mere song, and yet he outclasses any two-year-old now in his stable.

—At the Erie County Fair, at Buffalo, N. Y., the Moorehouse and Pepper's Roseberry cleared the high jump at 6 feet 6 inches.

—Mike Steinhaert, one of the owners of Ballston, who was ruled off this year was making a book at the Merchantsville track on Saturday last, September 22d.

—Mr. John Kelly, who has so successfully managed the betting interests at Monmouth and Jerome Parks, holds a like position under the Dwyer Brothers at the Brooklyn meeting.

—Foxhall, the American-bred winner of the Grand Prix de Paris, Cesarewitch, Cambridgeshire and Ascot gold cup, is announced for sale at the Newmarket second October meeting.

—Jockey "Marty" Bergan is trying to follow Garrison in his style of riding, and he is benefitting considerably by it. He "lays up" with his horse, and if he has any more of evidence he will get there. He is a splendid fisher, and neither Garrison, McLaughlin nor Hamilton can rattle him in any race.

—All doubts as to the cause of the deaths of the promising young Mount Holly pacer, Hiram, have been removed, as Professor Lefman, of Philadelphia, found arsenic in the stomach submitted to him.

—Rupert, the filly which ran up to El Rio River in the White Plains handicap at Westchester, and never beat him, has been priced by a leading Eastern turfite. The sum of $15,000 was asked, with the information thrown in that "Brown Dick considered her worth $20,000."

—Alice Murphy never made a more determined finish than he did on Kingston in the Oriental handicap. During the struggle he had lost his cap, his jacket had become loose at the waist, and working tirelessly with hands and feet he presented the picture of one determined to win at all hazards.

—It is said by many that Mr. Belmont will do with Garrison as he did with Godfrey a year ago, quietly "hand him down" for the year. He has never been so good as he has been since they lost the Futurity, since they expected to win with St. Carlo.

—Said John Splan recently: "I don't think Guy will ever beat the record of Max S. He can't come close to it. Just think of it in order to get the time you must drive a horse to the half-mile point in 1.04 and come home in 1.04. It looks impossible, for how many horses can go even the first half of the journey and tell you they are few and far between."

—As a means for detecting glanders a bucket full filled with water should be held under the animals nostrils, and the mucus permitted to drop into it. If the substance remains on top, spreads or dissolves, the disease is not present; but if the drop remains undissolved and sinks to the bottom it may be fairly assumed that it is. It is said the ancients tested the disease in this way.

—E. C. Walker, the Eastern editor of the Chicago Horseman, is quite a good reinman. He has driven the bay mare Miss Alice several good races this season, and has given her a record of 2.02 1/2 for the 3-minute class at Fleetwood track, New York, with the little lady. Mr. Walker is careful but fearless in a race, and he uses excellent judgment in handling her.

—"What do I think of the past season?" said C. M. Wilson, of Wilson & Stanley, owners of Reference, 2:19; Chapman, 2:19; Jim Fuller, 2:19, and other fast ones; "I think it is the greatest season we have ever had. The attendance at the races has been larger and of a higher class. The racing has been better, the horses faster and the speculation more lively. I think the outlook more favorable. I want to say one thing, though, and that is, a straight 5 per cent. entrance fee would be better for both horsemen and the associations than the present system."

—Hamilton, the black jockey, who, ever since the beginning of the Westchester meeting, has gone wild over him, has been carpeted for the million-dollar race in which he has been riding Senator Hearst's horses. Senator Hearst pays Hamilton $7000 per race. Since he has been riding for him, Hamilton has secured the best of the outside riding. A man having a choice horse in a big race always went to Hamilton, and Senator Hearst has always been willing to let him ride. Tenny and other cracks always brought a fancy present. Like most people of a mental calibre it spoiled him.

Two Mothers.

"During a day's travel recently an opportunity was afforded me to observe the opposite courses taken by two mothers, each with one child. Very near us was a young woman with a little one, just beginning to frame herself into a woman, and her features and bright eyes like its mother's, a little thing that attracted attention from its prettiness, and almost I fear so by its pertness, too?"

"The mother looked it upon the least as if the passengers that filled the car could have a full view of its every movement, then began the 'showing off'; it threw kisses, shook its little hand for goodby, roared toward the gentleman in front, compelling his attention; got off smart phrases from its small vocabulary, and all the while the mother encouraged and even prodded its baby to continue its antics."

Watch and Wait.

Watch and Wait. The wonderful romance of Dickens, "The Tale of Two Cities," there is an account of a certain man who kept a small wine-shop in the city of Paris.

His name was Defarge, and he was a small, stout, middle-aged man, with a large head and a large heart.

He had given him rest from all his enemies (2 Sam. 7: 1).

Thy throne shall be established for ever (2 Sam. 7: 16).

I also will make him... the highest of the kings (Psa. 89: 27).

God shall give unto him the throne of his father David (Luke 1: 32).

In the Orchard.

The autumn leaves are whirled away.
The other side look down at the
On faded autumn and woodland gray.
And the dandelion town.

Through the brown orchard's gusty aisle
In sad-hued gown and hood
Slow passes with a peaceful smile,
A maiden pure and good.

Her deep, serene, and dove-like eyes
Are downward bent; her face,
Whereon the pale moon's light lies,
Is sweet with nameless grace.

The frolic wind beside her blows;
The scarlet leaves dance and leap;
With hands before her clasped, she goes
As in a waking sleep.

To her the autumn skies are bright,
The russet earth is clear;
And never shall a fainter light
Nor breathe a softer air.

O wizard word whose magic art
Transmutes to run the shade,
These are the leaves that fill the heart
Of this meek Quaker maid.

A FISH WITH CLAWS.

"But indeed, boys, I am not easy about having you go out there without your father," said Mrs. Dixon anxiously. "I am so afraid something will happen to you. You know a bear was seen in that same neighborhood only yesterday, and he was not killed. He will be sure to come back there again."

"Now, mother," protested Tom and Will together, "there's nothing in the world to be worried about. You know John Bracebridge is going with us; and he is the very best guide in the whole region. Father told us we might go anywhere with him."

"Yes, I know; but that was before the bear had been seen," said Mrs. Dixon. "The bear is miles away from here before this time. It was the sanguine and impetuous Will who was so positive on this point, just as he was on most others. He got such a scare yesterday that he will not want to stay in this neighborhood. I can tell you—anybody Bracebridge says he doesn't believe it was a silver-tip at all."

"No," said Will like Tom; "and even if it was a silver-tip, or a grizzly either, I'd like to know if three of us wouldn't be enough to tackle him."

"But you two have nothing in the world but your fishing rods to tackle him with."

"Well, I'll tell you, mother," said Will, coaxingly, "if we see a sign of a bear's track we'll come right back without waiting to see the bear himself. But we shan't see any but old ones. Oh, we mustn't miss this chance, mummy! Bracebridge says the trout-fishing in this stream is the best in all Colorado."

With a sign of resignation, such as the mothers of very earnest and energetic boys are apt to indulge in, Mrs. Dixon signed that the two brothers were to have their way, and they set to work with wild enthusiasm to make their preparations for the day's fishing.

All Colorado was a novelty to the Pennsylvania family. Mr. Dixon had to spend most of the summer in the Centennial State on business; and he had brought his wife and two boys along so that the business trip might be made a pleasure excursion for the whole family.

He had brought them here at last, to this wild mountain retreat, where residents and tourists alike love to come in summer for the fishing and hunting, as well as for the beautiful coolness and the matchless beauty of the scenery.

Just after getting well settled in the little mountain hotel, he had found himself obliged to go back to Denver for a few days to meet some sudden business emergency. So Mrs. Dixon was left to manage two restless but thoroughly good boys as well as she could, alone.

It took only a very little time for the boys to make their preparations for this notable day's outing, and only a short time more for them to reach the stream where they were sure to find such sport as had never yet come in their way.

It was only because they were young, active and eager that they were able to go so quickly, however. Older and less vigorous legs would have made much slower progress over the piled-up rocks, the fallen timber and the tangled underbrush. To the guide accustomed to traveling such paths, and to the boys, full of joyous animation, these obstacles were not at all serious.

But even the boys had to stop from time to time to admire the grandeur of the scenery and to go into raptures over the wonders of the great solitude that surrounded them.

They discovered not a single bear's track, although, as Will said, "he was just the place to look for, if you wanted any." And you might even be accommodated in the "house of the bear" in a short time if they were too much absorbed in the fascinations of the fishing to think of bears, snakes or anything else than the work they had in hand.

"There's better'n this up above here a piece," said John Bracebridge, the guide, after a time. "You two fellows just stay right here. I'll go up a ways, 'specin' and when I've found the right place I'll come back, or, hold on. Now don't you get away now, hump!"

The boys promised and of course fully intended to keep their promise; so the guide left them without any misgivings. They were having reasonable success where they were, but were quite willing to have better; so they waited with a little impatience for the signal to resign the guide further up to the stream.

"I believe the fish have all gone down the stream, instead of up," said Tom after a little time. "Let's go back to the pool below. We had better luck there, and we can hear Bracebridge just as well when he calls."

"All right. You go on, and I'll come right away. I think there's a fellow here that means to answer the line I've dropped to him. I'll come down in five minutes."

So Tom went and Will stayed. But "a boy's will is the wind's will," Tom chanced his mind about going down the stream, and started to go a little way up instead. He would still be in sight of Will, and when Will moved down Tom would go down, too.

Will was too much absorbed in his sport to notice the change of route, and in fact forgot all about the plan in the excitement of trying to catch that tantalizing fish. So he stayed where he was.

Therefore Tom, who had already gone further up than he had intended, supposed Will had gone down the stream. Will supposed Tom had gone down the stream and John Bracebridge supposed they were both where he had left them. None of them had a thought about the bear which had so disturbed Mrs. Dixon's thoughts.

Tom had a reminder in a very short time, however. He had reached a point some little distance above where he and Will had been fishing and had discovered a pool that seemed to promise excellent things. He made a cast here and in a very few minutes was wild with the thrilling excitement that comes to the excellent fisherman. He wished Will had gone down the stream. their mother about it, in case they should happen to run across a bear. But at that time there were to be three of them together. One of them alone would do much better to run.

Yes, if he only could run! When he came up the stream there surely had not been so many rocks and logs to stand on and jump over, and the danger of getting stuck in the mud was so great. He could only crawl now, in spite of his best exertions. And that dreadful creature behind was certainly gaining on him; the noise came closer and closer.

He reached the place where he had left Will. Will was not there now, of course. He was at the pool further down where Tom ought also to be, he remembered. He hoped he would be able to join him there before the bear had quite caught up. It would be better for them to encounter such an enemy than for one only.

He came to the lower pool at length, but Will was not there either. Perhaps he also had heard the bear and was running away from it. However, he could not stop to speculate. He must get on his feet, and he must get on his feet. He hoped he would be able to join him there before the bear had quite caught up. It would be better for them to encounter such an enemy than for one only.

ambled straight across the open space to the area where they were in. At the foot of the tree he rose upon his haunches and began rocking himself to and fro like an old crane, looking up at the boys the while in the most disagreeable fashion.

"You haven't told me yet whether you can climb a tree!" whispered Tom.

"With one's nose! I have to lie on my back at this kind of thing very long. He'll have us to stay that we'll tumble down on top of him. Hark! That's John! That's John!"

Sure enough, back in the woods, and not very far away, the voice of John Bracebridge was heard, calling the names of the two boys. They answered with a yell that made the bear stop rocking for a moment.

"This way!" cried Tom. "Come carefully now and we'll cut away. We've got him and can keep him till you come, if you're careful!"

The next instant the gleam of John's rifle light was seen at the edge of the open glade. There was a flash, a report, a howl and a dead bear.

Tom and Will did not have many time to show to their mother at the hotel, but they were not without much complacency a silver-tip bear skin "that we got one day when we went fishing out in Colorado."

Unexpected.

There is a certain public library where a zealous little man does all in his power to uphold the rules of the institution, and at the same time, make things uncomfortable for the evil doers who neglect them lightly. This library displays its newest books in a glass case, which allows their backs to be viewed from the reading room, but which can only be opened from an inclosure sacred to the officials. Readers may, however, penetrate this inner recess by asking permission, though a sign near the case warns them not to attempt it without leave.

With starchy resolution as the antidote to the difficulties in snake-bite are greatly lessened, should a careful analysis of the history of a case not enable us to judge conclusively, whether the symptoms emanate from fear or real poisoning, a small injection of liquid strychnine will, in case of mere fear, be quite sufficient to brace up the nervous system and restore confidence of recovery, with which all alarming symptoms quickly disappear. Their continuance would indicate the presence of snake poisoning, and call for larger injections of the antidote. But if one of these cases of false alarm, alcohol has been administered in excess, as is usually done, we find the patient in the condition of coma—alcoholic coma—and we must diagnose this from snake-bite coma. In alcoholic coma the pupil is as often contracted as dilated, and becomes greatly dilated in extreme cases only, but then shows a sluggish reaction; in snake-bite the pupil is invariably dilated, the pulse slow and small, and the respiration slow, intermittent and often stertorous. In snake-bite coma the pupil is always greatly dilated, and insensible to light, the conjunctiva pale and not injected, the pulse quick and small and the respiration quick and shallow.

With regard to the use of alcohol in snake-bite, Dr. Mueller affirms that it is perfectly useless. No matter how large a quantity of whiskey or brandy is taken, its stimulating action does not become manifest by as much as a flush of the cheeks into the snake-poisoned patient. The great man smiled quietly, said "Good morning!" and walked away.

"I should like to call your attention to that sign!" cried he, thrusting it into the stranger's face. "Did you ask permission to come in here?"

"No," was the hesitating reply; but the custodian did not allow time for a possible apology.

"Then put up the book and go out!" cried he. "And next time when you are in a public building, read the signs."

The stranger meekly obeyed, but just as he turned away a deputation of the city fathers waited up the stairs.

"Ah, here you are!" said one. "We have had the museum downstairs unlocked, and when you are quite ready we will close it."

The two zealous custodians understood at the first word; this was the distinguished guest, and this the reception he had given him. The great man smiled quietly, said "Good morning!" and walked away.

"The Body and the Health."

THE NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, mislabeled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

A National Newspaper,

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

Latest reports up to Thursday, from the elections in the four new states confirm the sweeping Republican victory in the North and South Dakotas and Washington, and indicate a close fight in Montana, with both sides claiming the advantage. The Republican National Committee has news of Democrat defeat in Montana. The main contest in South Dakota was over the location of the temporary state capital, and all the numerous candidates are hopeful, with Pierre apparently in the lead. Woman suffrage was beaten in Washington. Prohibition was probably defeated in North Dakota and carried in South Dakota.

The Australian ballot was in operation in Montana and was a complete success.
