On Monday morning, an eighteen year old girl, named Schmidt, living in the Tillery house, hired a horse and carriage at Bernshouse's livery, for an hour's ride about town. Some hours later, as she did not return, an investigation was started. She was traced out Main Road, was seen passing through Berlin, and at 7.30 p.m. her little sister whom she had taken with her returned on the train, saying that her sister had put her out at Ashland, about seven miles from Camden. The team and driver seem to have vanished there, as neither Mr. Bernshouse nor detectives can find them. All sorts of rumors are heard, but this is the short story of a peculiar escapade.

Monday evening at eight o'clock was the time advertised for the sale of reserved seats for the lecture course. Boys were employed to secure first choice, in some cases, and two or three took places near Mr. Swain's window about nine o'clock in the morning, and remained until their tickets were secured. Several of the boys, it is said, lined up for the purpose of selling their positions, and one at least realized enough to pay for a season ticket. However, there were seats to go around and a few over. Bain had threatened all the afternoon, and came in time to sprinkle a score or more.

THE LAST HOUR

Suppose, beloved, that the gods should say:
"You shall have just one hour of joy to spend.
You two together; then shall come the end.
Henceforward each must walk alone for aye."
What would we do with that little hour?
Fond words of parting would we strive to speak.
Crowd phrases from our lips and seek
For messages of comfort and of power?

I think our hearts would be so full of pain
We should not speak at all, but you would press
My hands close, close in yours, and you would gaze
Deep down into my eyes. "Thus we should bless
Each other silently, and go our ways—
But oh! to think we could not meet again."
—Jessie Christian Brown.

"This is simply glorious!" Sir Godfrey was murmuring, profoundly, as he propelled the boat jerkily over the sunlit water, but as he bent on smiling idiotically I presumed he liked it. "Far be it from me to be a prophet of evil," I rejoined, "but I think your pleasure will be short-lived; there is a heavy cloud coming up in the west." "Toward it I hoped something—any thing—would happen to avert the impending declaration written large over him, from his new gray tweed to the patent leather shoes. He had come down from the city early this afternoon, had a short conversation with my stepmother, resulting in my being summarily bludgeoned to put on my white serge and go for a row on the water. My stepmother had added some urgent private words as I plumed myself to the effect that it was time I ceased being selfish and thought more of my duty to others.

I was trying to do that as I watched the striding leaving the light collar encircling Sir Godfrey's neck. The moment a rank rebellion against the powers that be, surged through my mind, with the memory of a day last year when Bobby and I had gone for a sail. What fun we had had, and how happy I had been. I was remembering the little sail, with the provisos, expense, and, with a sigh, I cut-love overboard and tried to smile on pious duty.

"Those clouds are coming up closer," I continued pleasantly. "Don't talk of clouds just now," Sir Godfrey, easing the oars in the row locks, leaned forward toward me. "I would never allow a cloud to come near you, darling—Oh hang!" he had noticed his seat-clutching wildly at the air, as his straw hat, by a sudden gust of wind, whirled upward overhead.

When it is not your property there is nothing funnier to watch than the gestures of a rank rebellion against the powers that be, surged through my mind, with the memory of a day last year when Bobby and I had gone for a sail. What fun we had had, and how happy I had been. I was remembering the little sail, with the provisos, expense, and, with a sigh, I cut-love overboard and tried to smile on pious duty.

"I know," I assented meekly, "and I am very sorry, but it was the one thing on my mind. Really it seems as if the wind and the sea were conspiring in a practical joke!" "A joke without any point," he said softly. "But I am relieved you are not depressed by the prospect of spending the afternoon, and possibly the evening, in this cockleshell, exposed to the fury of the elements." He passed his hand over his ruffled hair and glared at me.

RATTLESNAKES OF THE ISLE

He pointed out to me at once: "Captain Starr refuses to put us aboard tonight," he exclaimed. "It is most inconvenient for me."
"But not to Miss Carrawe, I trust," said the captain, blandly. "The tide is increasing, so we must make for a French port, but I shall land you safe at Portsmouth again to-morrow morning."

"It is very kind of you to keep us," I promptly rejoined, "and I for one am enjoying myself immensely."
"The captain laughed, and though Sir Godfrey fumed, muttering about "important business in the city," he regarded him untroubled.

Later on Bobby came up to me. "The captain is on the bridge and wants to know if you'd care to go up," he said.
"I'd love to," I said, eagerly. "When we came up Captain Starr received us with a beaming smile. Good thing we came along and picked up up, Miss Carrawe, you'd be rather seasick about this pleasure boat of ours in a sea like this, eh?"

"I think so," I said, as I looked over the expanse of restless gray water. "We had, towed by a grass-hawser behind the survey steamer, was pitched out in a way that made me glad to be out of her."

Presently the captain said something to Bobby and left the bridge. I kept my eyes on the foamy water rushing past us. The "vicious" had been through, while Bobby took a couple of turns. Presently he halted.

"Are you going to answer my question now?" he said, leaning against the rail and staring at me. "And is it yes or no?"

"Yes, it is," I said, "but I don't want to get into any complications. I added, 'Not to him.' Bobby's sunburned hand sank down on mine.

"Then—dear little girl, make it yes to me. I really think I can look after you better than that brewer chap."

"I am certain of it," I said with conviction. "So the next morning H. M. Survey Steamer Research took alongside the Fifth House jetty in Portsmouth Dock, and two stately constabulary human beings, I remember, were on deck."

"One moment," he said; "then, turning to me, 'I trust you are not, very wet or cold? My cabin is at your service while you are on board. Mr. Vetchard, kindly conduct this lady there.'"

"I looked up quickly at the name and found Bobby confronting me!" He bowed as if to a stranger and proceeded to conduct me under the moon on the upper deck. But when we were out of sight of Sir Godfrey we both stopped and eyed each other. Then he said abruptly:

"I suppose you consider I haven't a right to ask you, but—what in the mischief possessed you to get out in an open boat in such weather like this? Did you want to get drowned?"

"Judging from your expression, you are disappointed I am not," I retorted, "but I can't help being alive—and really, I think it would be more polite if you said you were glad to see me."

"Who is that fellow with you?" he demanded sternly. "How nice the old brand looks on your cuff," I commented.

"Who is that chuckleheaded fellow?" he repeated, ignoring my remarks and glaring at me fiercely. "Sir Godfrey Dranden."

"The rich brewer your people are anxious to catch? I can't complain of them on their taste."

FACTS IN TABLOID FORM

The speed of Russian express trains is about twenty miles an hour. Whoooping cough kills more children under five years of age than scarlet fever.

Deaths from hydrophobia in Europe average only a small fraction over one a year. There are now over 33,000 men employed in government dockyards in England.

Dragon flies can catch insects when flying at the rate of forty or fifty miles an hour. Gros as served in the British navy consists of a mixture of three parts water and one part rum.

An ingenious machine recently patented by an Iowa tanner is a piece of wire, cuts it the right length, bends it and fastens it around hose to hold a coupling.

An electric glue heater has been put on the market, and is said to keep melted glue at a temperature of 150 degrees for several hours after the current has been shut off.

A Maryland railroad is experimenting with lighting trains with natural gas, which is compressed in storage tanks under each car in sufficient quantity to last through 150 miles.

The old lady had a severe illness, and she was relating its vicissitudes to a friend or two in the grocery shop when the minister came in. "It's only by the Lord's mercy," she proudly declared, "that I'm not in 'heaven' tonight."

The latest improved life preserver is a hollow belt of rubber to which is attached a cylinder filled with liquid carbon dioxide. On turning a tap the liquefied gas escapes into the belt, volatilizes and inflates it to its fullest capacity, 27½ quarts, which makes it superior to any cork belt.

These forty-two weeks and includes a strenuous period of braving on the freight train. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt does not overestimate the odds of creation. She was speaking recently of another prominent woman who is somewhat lukewarm in the suffrage cause.

"The trouble with Mrs. Blank," said Mrs. Catt, "is that she is too good a housewife. She thinks that if it is absolutely perfect—why, the woman can't be a woman."

At a court of justice in Australia much frequented by Chinese a newly appointed clerk was ordered by the judge to summon a witness to the stand. "Call for Ah Seng," was the command. The clerk was puzzled for a moment. He glanced shyly at the judge, but found him quite grave.

Then he turned to the spectators. "Gentlemen," he asked, "would any of you favor the introduction of a new spirit? 'I will not have him here. He frightens me.'"

"But he can do you no harm, my dearest," answered her lover, soothingly. "I am here to protect you."

"But he will harm me," she answered, trembling as she spoke. "Keep him away from me. The very look of his face frightens me to death."

To soothe her, Anstruther pronounced to do what he could, but he confessed the gravity of the task that lay before him. To tell the Spaniard that he must leave the house would only be to bring about a violent rupture which, as he knew, would be disastrous.

Since that time the Great Salt Lake has become the principal tourist-bait of the West. The lake is a beautiful body of water, and is a great source of recreation for the people of the West.

Brighton Tragedy

By GUY BOOTHBY

When they had crossed the patio and entered the house, he gestured that she should wait for him. Anstruther returned to the patio to commiserate with himself as to what course he should next pursue. He was still turning this over in his mind when a loud knocking was heard; the outer doors. The old manservant, Diaz, hobbled across the pavement, and threw them open, when a horseman, clad in the fashion of the Plains was seen outside. After a few words with the old man he dismounted, and entered the courtyard. Without much interest Anstruther looked at him, only to discover that it was none other than his old enemy, Quintana. What was he doing here? Why had he left San Pedro?

Anstruther discovered that his troubles and anxieties were by no means at an end. The strain of the last few weeks had proved too much for the highly wrought girl, and a severe attack of brain fever was the result. It is not her life, but her reason, if not her life, that is at stake. How Anstruther lived through that time he does not know to this day. "Every hour was a living nightmare. To add to his misery he was not allowed to see her. But it was of Quintana's presence in the greatest dread. She had not been informed that he was in the house; yet she seemed to be aware of the fact. More than once she believed him to be in her room, and shrieked to those about her to take him away. Anstruther resented Quintana's presence in the house, and was at no pains to conceal the fact. The Spaniard, on the other hand, was well aware of the other's feelings towards him, though he, on his side, was perfectly conscious of the betrothal, and he was putting his wits to work in every way in order to discover by what manner of means he could not only prevent it, but obtain possession of her for himself.

Still holding firmly to the sandwich, the professor gave a wild leap that landed him in the lake. This cold water and the laughter of his friends restored his reasoning faculties, but during the fall of the cat he had reached the conclusion that all the snakeskins in creation would not tempt him to visit Rattlesnake Island again.

A powerful new automobile gun has been invented, the projectile of which, if it is used, will pierce half-inch Bessemer steel at one thousand yards. The gun carries a 300-millimeter cartridge.

The family relations of vertebrates have long interested biologists. Is man to trace his ancestry to a sea worm or to a crab? Professor Goddard of the University of Chicago, in his book, "The Evolution of Man," has shown that the human race is descended from a primitive worm-like form, rejecting the theory of the descent of man from a monkey.

Dr. Patton of the United States and Dr. Gaskell of England, on the other hand, see in the king crab the ancestor of their race. "Tiffen offer," remarked the Baltimore Sun. "It has the liberty of selecting his ancestors, some of us undoubtedly prefer the octopus."

In 1893 an enormous bathing pavilion was built on a mile out in the water, with bathhouses running in crescent-shaped lines toward the shore from both sides of the pavilion. In 1900 the lake began to go away. In 1904 bathing ended, and the lake was a great waste of water. The bathing house proprietors had to turn the house of their crescent the other way about. And then from one of them they had to turn an improvised trolley another mile out to the water.

In 1906 a government report was made that the lake was gone, and that the bathing house proprietors had to turn the house of their crescent the other way about. And then from one of them they had to turn an improvised trolley another mile out to the water.

body. It would have needed only a small spark to have brought about an explosion. But Quintana's triumph was destined to be short-lived. One day it was necessary for Anstruther to visit the capital on business. He returned just as dusk was falling. He gave up his horse and entered the house. If the truth must be told, he was in a very despondent frame of mind. The time was drawing near for him to take Quintana away from Colombia. If he were going to take her at all. But what about Quintana? That he had an uneasy influence over her was quite certain; would he use it to prevent her leaving the country? He made his way to the room which had been the favorite apartment of Quintana's mother. As he reached the door he paused, for the sound of a voice reached him from within. He recognized it as Quintana's. But there was something in it that he had never heard before.

"You cannot escape me," he was saying. "You are mine, body and soul. To-morrow night you will leave this place with me, and I warn you that, if you let fall as much as a hint, his life will pay the penalty."

Pearling lest Quintana might come out of the room, Anstruther turned on his heel and went back to the patio, where he seated himself on the fountain edge and tried to think what was best to be done. There could be no doubt that the Spaniard must be outwitted, if he wished to save Quintana, and the only way to do that was to get her to the sea and on board the small boat en route for England with Anstruther as pilot. It would be a dangerous business, but he could not afford to think of that. Her reason, perhaps her very life, depended on the promptness of his action. He determined to commence operations at once. He was still turning this over in his mind when Quintana entered the patio. There was a look of triumph upon his face which he was unable to conceal. He passed Anstruther without a word, and went out through the gates.

"Now?" said the other, to himself. "But as it was unable to answer the question to his own satisfaction, he put it aside and went into the house in search of Quintana. He found her in the room which she had just left. She was sitting at a table, and he heard the Spaniard talking to her. She was crooked upon a settee near the window, in an attitude betokening the deepest dejection. Anstruther crossed and seated himself beside her.

"Catalina," he said, "can you tell me where he is? Will you not confide in me and tell me what I can do to ease his heart so you like this?"

As he said this he placed his hand upon her shoulder as if to draw her to him, but she shrank away as if it were a serpent. "You are a rabbit-fascinated-by-a-snake," she said. "You can do nothing," she whispered. "Leave me to my fate, or I shall drag you down into the pit into which I am falling myself."

"Hush, hush, my love," he said, soothingly. "You must not talk like that. Leave everything to me, and I will take care that no harm befalls you. Will you be brave, Catalina, and do exactly as I ask you, without questioning the why and wherefore?"

"I have no navy left," she answered. "You do not know the power he has over me. When he looks at me as he does, I have no will of my own, my brain becomes numbed, and I am forced to do his bidding."

Anstruther cursed the Spaniard under his breath, but aloud he said: "That is only your fancy. The fellow has not so much power over you as he says, and I swear to you upon my honor that no evil shall befall you while you love me. You do love me still, Catalina?"

"I love you as fondly as ever," she replied. "But what is the use of that when he will not allow me to become your wife?"

"Don't say that," said the other, indignantly. "We'll see about that. I don't want to boast, but I am as good a man as any, and I swear to you upon my honor that no evil shall befall you while you love me. You do love me still, Catalina?"

Science and Invention

A Pennsylvania has patented a waterproof cover for women's hats so compact that it may be folded and carried in the pocket.

A volta of lead and zinc ore has been discovered on the ground of the School of Mines at Platteville, Wis., and will be developed by the students.

The danger in packing meat extracts and preparation in tin is said to lie in the fact that the absorption of the tin by the contents is continuous.

Artificial slates are made by coating paper with a mixture of copal varnish, serpentine, blotting sand, powdered glass, powdered slate and lamp black.

New York has nearly 5,000,000 acres of meadow land; upon which more than 4,000,000 tons of hay are raised each year. Concrete safes, molded in a single piece, with steel doors, are a novelty. They are said to be both damp and fireproof.

The Atchafalaya Railroad is about to experiment at Great Bend, Kan., with cocobolo and Japanese oak as material for sleepers. The wood is so hard that it is almost impossible to drive spikes into it, and screw spikes in bored holes will be used. It is expected that the sleepers will last from 25 to 30 years. They cost a trifle more than American oak delivered in California.

The reason for experimenting with them is that native oak is becoming scarce, and it is deemed wise to look in time for a substitute.

Mr. Robert W. Yerkes raises the question whether kittens are born with a propensity to eat mice. Three Marx kittens kept in a cage for six weeks with a mouse, which was introduced when they were five months old, made no attempt to injure it, although they were hungry, until the mother cat was introduced and showed how mice should be treated. Other observers have noted the indisposition of kittens to attack mice, but the question whether mouse-killing is instinctive or educable remains unsettled.

San Benito County, California, has given its name to a new candidate for admission to the circle of the precious stones—"benitoite." It is a sapphiric stone—hard and remarkably brilliant. Chemists say it is a silico-titanate of barium. It is found in rock pockets, and in geodes associated with natrolite and a hitherto unknown black mineral called carlosite. During 1907 benitoite made its first entry into the report of the Geological Survey on the precious stones of the United States; the value of the mineral was estimated at $1,500. In the same year Africanus produced $2,800 worth of diamonds. The leading precious stone in America in value of production is tourmaline, of which $84,120 worth was cut upon the market in 1907. But it weighed a ton.

The Only Reason. A keen golfer, but middling player, who was paying his annual visit to a certain seaside course, remarked to his caddy:

"By the way, I played a round with Tom McGregor the last time I was here. Grand player, McGregor?"

"Aye," said the caddy, "but you could beat McGregor now."

"Do you think so?" exclaimed the gratified visitor, well aware of the McGregor prowess.

"Aye," said the caddy, "McGregor's caddy."

The Name Dismissed. The bride-to-be had the air of one who is unaccustomed to the existing state of affairs. "Can't we take a wedding up, as we'd planned?" she asked plaintively.

"Not just now," said the young man, "on account of my partner's illness."

"I thought it would be such fun, taking that six days' journey in the cab!" she sighed.

"Well, now, see here," said the young man. "If we take the flat I looked at yesterday, it'll be just the same as living in the parlor-car room, except that the scenery won't change."

Not Her First Choice. He was excessively fond of dancing. A writer in the Mites Tribune. Also he was very clumsy, and like a good many other people he was fond of doing the thing he did worst. She, too, was excessively fond of dancing, with the difference that she was the personification of grace. But now she was suffering. "Already he had lost her train with his ungovernable feet, and her father slipped loose the marks of his shoes. At last she could stand it no longer.

"Let us sit out the rest of this dance," she suggested. "I am tired." He was reluctant. "I thought you said you could sit out waiting."

"So I could," she replied, "but there are pleasant ways of dying than being trampled to death."

Congressman Webber, of Ohio.

Mr. Webber, who is giving a series of lectures in New Jersey in behalf of Local Option, is to speak in the M. E. Church, Hammononton, tomorrow evening at eight o'clock.

Mr. Webber is one of the leading lawyers in Ohio, and an eloquent speaker. He has been a leader in the fight against the saloon, in his state, where sixty-five counties have gone dry during the past twelve months.

Local option has been the law in Ohio for eight or nine years, and Mr. Webber will tell of its effect on communities, from a moral, social and economic standpoint.

This is to be a Sunday evening union meeting, and everybody is invited to come and hear.

To Hammononton Voters.

I desire to notify the voters of Hammononton that I have withdrawn from the contest for Mayor of Hammononton, owing principally to rush of business and the erection of a new factory, which will require so much of my time that I could not give the necessary attention to the duties of the office.

In view of my knowledge of existing conditions, I deem it my duty to urge my friends, who have so kindly supported me in the past, to give the same loyal treatment at the coming election, to Mr. John M. Austin, candidate for Mayor.

Thanking you very kindly for your support and assistance, given me in my term of office as Councilman, I remain your obedient servant,

THOMAS SHINN.

Tuesday was an ideal Indian summer day—mercury rising to 72. The air grew chilly before sunrise, and Wednesday morning we found everything coated with white frost, and a keen to be in place. This was repeated on Thursday morning, and the beautiful dahlias looked as though flames had eaten at them.

The gift of a HOWARD Watch has been the deciding event in many a young man's career.
The Howard has character.

It imparts its character to its owner.
Unconsciously he begins to live up to his watch. He acquires habits of decision—of attention to details—of punctuality, the politeness of kings.
The leaders of American progress have been proud to rely on "Howard time."
Every HOWARD is made and adjusted as a fine watch. Cased and timed in its own case by the HOWARD watchmakers before leaving the factory.
The HOWARD has a fixed price ($15 to $150)—priced price ticket attached at the factory. Its value is permanent—as you know if you have ever tried to buy one at second hand.
We carry this distinctive watch and would like to show it to you.

Special Town Meeting.
A meeting of citizens was called for Thursday evening, in Town Hall, to consider the report of the Finance Committee in regard to extending the water mains. The committee reported as follows:

To the Honorable Mayor and Members of Town Council:
GENTLEMEN: We, your Committee on Finance, ordered to secure information on the proposed "Water Main Extension," as laid down by the Water Commissioners, beg to report the following:

Extension No. 1.—to be laid from Twelfth Street to Thirteenth Street, on First Road, and extending from First Road to Campiglia's Hotel, on Thirteenth Street. Distance, 4,800 feet, cost $2400, will serve 21 consumers at an average of $8 each, giving an income of $168.—7 per cent of cost.

Extension No. 2.—to be laid from Third Street to Main Road, on Fairview Avenue, and from Main Road to Pine Road, on Main Road. Distance, 7900 feet; cost, $3,950; 31 consumers at an average of $8; footing $243, or 64 per cent of cost.

To place fire plugs in these extensions 600 feet apart, would require 21 plugs at a cost of $504,—making a total cost of all extensions and fire plugs, $3854.

Your Committee hereby recommends that the sum of ten thousand dollars be voted for, and it seems in their judgment that this amount would be ample to make all necessary extensions, for the present, at least.

[Signed] C. A. WOOD, Chairman.
THOMAS SHINN,
J. V. BAKER.

They also stated that the assessors would advance valuations of properties along the proposed extensions $10,000, netting the town $160 a year extra, in taxes. A few questions were asked, and the report unanimously adopted.

D. B. Frazier & Co. offered to run water mains on their streets, provided the town would agree to purchase same by sections, at cost, when they return a profit of 16 per cent. Voted, that the Commissioners and Council agree to this, provided the Solicitor approves.

This meeting was the most harmonious we ever attended.
