Tick-Tick.

Tick-tick—the clock on the mantle piece,

Measures the moments, solemn and slow.

Each tick takes a minute from life's lease,

Held by grim Death, of the world below.

Old Time with patience, keeps the score,

White hair, reluctantly, hurries us on,

And borrow, kindly points to the door,

Through which we exit, when life is done.

Tick on old clock, you're a merry sound,

The faster you tick, the better 'twill please;

Free from its weight of flesh and bone,

Methinks the spirit, will take more ease.

For the sin of the world, is a heavy weight,

And the sin of the flesh is the sin of the world.

And we're apt to get fat, if the hour is late,

When life's anchor is dropped, and the sails are furled.

Tick on old clock, do your duty well,

For this living, as well as the dead;

We have tasted life, and the good we can tell,

Won't amount to much, when all is said.

And the pleasure we've had, in the balance laid

By the side of life's sorrow, want, and woe,

Makes us think that the quicker the debt is paid,

The better for us, and the world below.

Hammononton, Sept. 12th, 1878.

JAMES NORTH.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 14, 1878.

It is a well known fact that Kearney when here, received very little sympathy from any reputable source. Business men, politicians, and a vast majority of the members of the various local labor organizations were so pointed in their avoidance of the unimpeachable demagogue, as to afford him no encouragement to repeat his visit. Cohen and his handful of loafers and strikers who have given the police some trouble and occasioned a good deal of excitement first and last, have had no better success in eliciting sympathy, or in committing any oneering outrage for reprobation to their lawless programme. Even the masses of our colored population, who, more than any similar number of our other residents, have suffered from the effects of the business depression of the past five years, turned deaf ears to the constant appeals made to them to unite with the gang, and have decisively negated every proposition made to array them against the authorities. In short, our citizens have repeatedly demonstrated their law-abiding character and their lack of sympathy with agrarianism.

But the laboring and business element of this town feel that they have ample ground for their impatience that is more and more taking the form of indignation as weeks lapse into months and months into years, and there is no apparent move made to undertake the work for which comparatively large appropriations have been made, and some of them more than two years ago, and thus furnish labor and give business a fresh impetus. And it is not easy to feel otherwise than that those entrusted with the work for which these appropriations have been voted, are supremely indifferent to the distress everywhere prevalent, also these works had been undertaken long ago and pushed to completion, July 1st, 1876, Congress still prompted by the patriotism and other inspiring things libelous on the occasion of the members visit to the Centennial Exposition the day previous, voted $200,000 whereof to complete the Washington Monument. After a good deal of dilly-dallying among the officials, including a survey by an Army Engineer, whose conclusions were subsequently found all wrong, it was decided an additional $30,000 was required to strengthen the base that the imposing superstructure might be entirely safe. It was voted, and early last Spring it was announced that everything was in readiness and that the work was to go right on to completion. But beyond tearing off the old wood work left on top of the marble shaft when work was discontinued nearly 20 years ago, and cutting a little earth from one part of the ground to another, giving employment to only a handful of laborers, nothing seems to have been done, and at the rate of speed manifested by the custodians of this fund in pushing the work, George Washington will have been forgotten many thousand years before the monument is completed, if only that is requisite to keep his memory green. This illustrates the spirit that seems to have governed relative to other public works for which appropriations were made months ago. Our well paid, luxuriously lodged and over-fed officials seem too intent on their own ease and pleasures to spare a little of their squandered time to the duties made by law incumbent on them, and whose prompt execution would afford vital relief to scores who seem their superiors in everything but official position. There is also a growing fear that in our change of District Commissioners, we have fallen into the hands of modern reformers—or at least that a majority of the new Board are justly entitled to the kind of distinction implied by that designation. Burdened as we are with debt, while advocating rigid retrenchment by cutting down the salaries of school teachers, policemen and other workers, and while looking on with apparent unconcern and self-satisfied complacency at the effort to reduce the rate of day laborers to 50 cents a day, they are reported as sneaking the law for authority to increase the District Attorney's salary to $5,000.

Recent investigation by those largely interested in the shipment of cattle to Europe, seems to have aroused new interest among business men of Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York in new railroad enterprise, having among their other special objects, the furnishing of better facilities to this trade, and its larger development. The direct shipment of cattle, especially of comparatively recent beginning, has become a business of considerable magnitude. Back to transportation facilities seem about the only bar to its almost indefinite expansion. Coupled with the "hard times," the arbitrary and exorbitant rates demanded by our only railroad to the Pacific, have served to confine the limits within which it could be profitably carried.

As has been the case with ordinary kinds of business, that have been forced to seek a market over Hamilton's road. As anticipated, however, many heretofore hostile to the new line, projected, and a large class of business men who were indifferent so long as they were furnished fair accommodations even though at high rates, seem about to unite with the advocates of competing lines, to free themselves from the exactions and intolerable tyranny of the existing monopoly.

Editor of S. J. REPUBLICAN: Will you allow me a little space in your paper to thank the officers of the Hammononton Park Association for their liberality toward the Religious Societies of this town in offering the free use of their grounds and all the various conveniences they have provided, as any time when they wish to have picnics, fairs, etc.

The U. & U. Society were the first to avail themselves of the offer, on Sunday last, and those who have enjoyed the privilege of holding a picnic of food on one knee, a sup, a dance on the other, and a few extras in each hand, could not fail to appreciate the advantages of a good table in a commodious and pleasant hall, in the immediate vicinity of all the other conveniences of the place, and about all to have a good supply of things at hand, and some fresh about making and putting up those belonging to individuals afterwards. I have good reason to think that the officers of the Park Association were glad to have us avail ourselves of this offer, and I know that a large portion, at least, of those who were present, thoroughly appreciated their liberality.

October.

Crowned with surpassing grace and loveliness, the fair young Summer reigned a beautiful and beneficent Queen. God had laid his hand in blessing upon the stem-crowned head, and his touch lingering there, gave to her beauty its highest crown of gentle tenderness. Upon the pure forehead shone lustrous stars, beneath her foot sprang the sweet flowers. The white water-lily slept upon her bosom. The odor of still pine forests gave their fragrance to her breath. In her voice was heard the music of purring brooks and murmuring fountains—in her laugh the echo of thy, leaping cascade. Everywhere she scattered about her warmth and gladness and beauty. Enthroned upon the purple hills she sat, the green earth her foot-stool, the gleaming sunshine her golden scepter, the wide world her dominion. All hearts came to her, and yielded to her the most loving homage. Surely in herself she holds all the beauty and sweetness and glory of life, lacking nothing in her completeness.

But a gentle sigh ruffles the calm of that peaceful breast, and the fair brow is clouded with troubled thought. Whence comes the deep, restless yearning at her heart? Why the longing and waiting for some great joy, some good which seems not her's? Is her present life imperfect, incomplete? Unconscious what is wanting, she strives to still the mighty heart whose throbbing stirs the world; but oftentimes her blue eyes grow sad and pitiful, and overflow with pearly tears. At last there comes a day when a King kneels humbly and reverently before the throne of Queen Summer. Listening to his words she learns whence came the restless longing that had stirred her heart; discovers why amidst all its possessions her soul desired one crowning good. She reigned a Queen, but alone. Alone no longer, for before her kneels her King, telling in tender, earnest words, the story of his love. Upon his bosom she shall rest, wrapped about in the pure white mantle of his love, and together they will reign while the glad earth rejoices at their union. Slowly, slowly the crimson flush ebbles her cheeks, imparting an unearthly beauty. The blue eyes luminous with the light of love, grow darker with unknown depths of tender meaning. The pure brow is radiant with spirit light. Above it burns and throbs the beautiful evening star.

Too fair now to be seen face to face with the modesty of love, she veils herself in a misty, hazy veil of royal purple, woven of beautiful, by-gone dreams and future hopes, mingled with present dreamy fancies. The eternal mountains guard her stately throne; the ever murmuring ocean brings his treasures to her feet. Upon her forehead love has set his signet, making beauty more beautiful. So, clothed with light, as with a garment, crowned not only with power but with the humility of love, majestic in her strength, glorious in her beauty, Summer awaits her King!

FROM MR.
JOHN WANAMAKER.

CHANGES AT THE GRAND DEPOT

Thanks for the Large Patronage through the Summer, which was larger than the previous season.

We start this Autumn under much Better Auspices than ever before.

Portions of the House have been rebuilt and remodeled. Few changes have been made in Locations of Stock, because the people don't like such changes.

New Varieties of Goods introduced. Cash Decks multiplied. Quicker wrapping up and Exchange System established.

The Fact is we have learned "a lot" since the Dry Goods Section was begun, and the Improvements made will show that we mean to make the Grand Depot all that it people want it to be.

We have Changed some of the Heads of our Departments and now have the close interested Personal Supervision of Excellent Persons over Every Section of the House.

Two of our buyers went out to Europe for specialties in stock, and we are now ready, and
