More Than a Medicine.
For over twelve years my son has been afflicted with spasms; he would have one every two weeks until about six months ago, then only one a week. We took him to a number of the best physicians and we tried everything that a number of remedies without getting any relief or improvement in his case, and he was about to despair of ever being able to enjoy a normal life when we heard of Dr. Koenig's Nerve Tonic and concluded to give it a trial. The result is more than satisfied! It is more than three months since he commenced to take this Nerve Tonic and he has never been sick since. Please accept our most sincere thanks, for we feel that you have not only cured him of a great ailment but have saved his life as well, as we do not think he would have lived long in the condition he was in before we commenced taking this reliable remedy.

FANCY WORK.

Among the many useful and necessary articles of household furnishing, the screen plays a most important part.

Small, single or three-fold, screens are considered the most fashionable, and they are also the most useful.

First, then, supposing one has always had good eyesight, but has now arrived at forty or more years of age, and has found that it is becoming difficult to read in the evening or in a dim light, and that he has had to gradually remove the paper further and further away, in order to read comfortably at night.

Now he is compelled to work almost as a slave in one of the big fields of the world, and he is in need of a pair of glasses.

Henry Ward Beecher's Father.

C. K. Tuckerman tells in the North American Review various stories of Boston people. Here is a bit of personal reminiscence:

"Another very notable clergyman of Boston was the Rev. Lyman Beecher, father of the late Henry Ward Beecher of Brooklyn. He was one of the lights—technically speaking the 'blue light'—of Calvinism. He was a powerful preacher to a devoted congregation, and indulged in sectarian denunciation beyond what were generally considered the bounds of good taste.

Recalling a rainy Sunday afternoon, when Beecher's church 'being near' our house, I attended the services, more, I fear, for curiosity than religious impulse. The sermon was upon preparation in fulfilling Christian observance. It made an impression upon my mind from a circumstance that attended it. After describing the horrors of hell that await the impenitent sinner, and enumerating the sins which lead to the burning gulf, among which proscription is one of the greatest, the eloquent preacher illustrated this evil by a case in point. A mother who had always intended to present her infant for baptism postponed the ceremony, through neglect or worldly occupation, from day to day and from week to week.

As a careless nurse was one day amusing the infant by throwing it up and down, the mother, who was sitting nearby, saw the child fall heavily upon its head, and the child fractured its skull and shortly after died.

"That child," continued the preacher, "who might have been an angel in heaven, is now, through the negligence of its parents in the matter of baptism, a victim of hell!"

The congregation was much moved, and the mother especially so, for she realized that her own child was in danger of being lost to heaven through her own neglect.

Who Should Wear Glasses.

The question, does one need to wear glasses or not? is one that people must often decide, in fact, for themselves, and one which is perfectly proper for them to wisely consider at all times.

Not that they can always 'rightly' say, by any means, but that it is practical for them to make with them always to see whether they shall undertake to find out the probable necessity or not.

Many suffer so much before their attention is directed to the eyes as a possible source of trouble, that suggestions and rules which may help them to a quicker discovery seem proper and desirable.

Of course, nothing of the kind can be considered as entirely conclusive, and should not be accepted as such. Once the suggestion comes, let the oculist decide what should be actually done.

First, then, supposing one has always had good eyesight, but has now arrived at forty or more years of age, and has found that it is becoming difficult to read in the evening or in a dim light, and that he has had to gradually remove the paper further and further away, in order to read comfortably at night.

Henry Ward Beecher's Father.

C. K. Tuckerman tells in the North American Review various stories of Boston people. Here is a bit of personal reminiscence:

"Another very notable clergyman of Boston was the Rev. Lyman Beecher, father of the late Henry Ward Beecher of Brooklyn. He was one of the lights—technically speaking the 'blue light'—of Calvinism. He was a powerful preacher to a devoted congregation, and indulged in sectarian denunciation beyond what were generally considered the bounds of good taste.

Recalling a rainy Sunday afternoon, when Beecher's church 'being near' our house, I attended the services, more, I fear, for curiosity than religious impulse. The sermon was upon preparation in fulfilling Christian observance. It made an impression upon my mind from a circumstance that attended it. After describing the horrors of hell that await the impenitent sinner, and enumerating the sins which lead to the burning gulf, among which proscription is one of the greatest, the eloquent preacher illustrated this evil by a case in point. A mother who had always intended to present her infant for baptism postponed the ceremony, through neglect or worldly occupation, from day to day and from week to week.

As a careless nurse was one day amusing the infant by throwing it up and down, the mother, who was sitting nearby, saw the child fall heavily upon its head, and the child fractured its skull and shortly after died.

"That child," continued the preacher, "who might have been an angel in heaven, is now, through the negligence of its parents in the matter of baptism, a victim of hell!"

The congregation was much moved, and the mother especially so, for she realized that her own child was in danger of being lost to heaven through her own neglect.

Who Should Wear Glasses.

The question, does one need to wear glasses or not? is one that people must often decide, in fact, for themselves, and one which is perfectly proper for them to wisely consider at all times.

Not that they can always 'rightly' say, by any means, but that it is practical for them to make with them always to see whether they shall undertake to find out the probable necessity or not.

Many suffer so much before their attention is directed to the eyes as a possible source of trouble, that suggestions and rules which may help them to a quicker discovery seem proper and desirable.

Of course, nothing of the kind can be considered as entirely conclusive, and should not be accepted as such. Once the suggestion comes, let the oculist decide what should be actually done.

First, then, supposing one has always had good eyesight, but has now arrived at forty or more years of age, and has found that it is becoming difficult to read in the evening or in a dim light, and that he has had to gradually remove the paper further and further away, in order to read comfortably at night.

Now he is compelled to work almost as a slave in one of the big fields of the world, and he is in need of a pair of glasses.

Republican Ticket.

For Assemblyman, Samuel D. Hoffman, Of Atlantic City.
For Coroner, George F. Breder, Of Egg Harbor City.

Not for very many years have the people of St. John had the opportunity to hear a concert like that given last evening in the Institute, by the Ariel-Thomas Company. The audience contained many well known local musicians who were keenly appreciative of the finished manner with which an excellent programme was carried out, so much so, in fact, that they enthusiastically encored every number. The Ariel Quartette is well known, and their voices blend exquisitely. They sang with great expression and were listened to with breathless attention. Besides being the possessors of finely trained voices, they are ladies of fine stage appearance. Mr. Thomas did not disappoint the audience, who anticipated great things from him. His songs were intensely amusing, and his recitations even more so. He kept the audience in roars of laughter, and the opinion formed of him was that he is the finest artist in the comedy line that has visited St. John for many years.—St. John, N. B., Globe.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd of Boston, S. D., we learn that "I was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave up myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones in heaven. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds. I gave it a trial, took it all night long; it has cured me and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman." Mrs. S. W. Clark, of Paterson, spoke upon "Supplemental work for the little people," using charts to illustrate the method employed by her in teaching supplemental lessons on the books of the Bible and Bible geography.

A collection was then taken up.

This image shows a single sheet of white paper with horizontal blue or grey ruling lines. A vertical margin line is present on the left side. The paper appears to be from a notebook or a set of legal pads. There are some faint smudges and marks on the surface, particularly near the top and bottom edges. The right edge of the paper is slightly irregular, suggesting it might be part of a bound volume.
